RECORD SALE OF TOBACCO SEASON

Saturday's Sales at Bourbon Warehouse Records Big Average.

$12.61 TOP AVERAGE.

Prospect for Lively Market in Future Brighter Than Ever.

Saturday's tobacco sales at the Bourbon Tobacco Warehouse Company's house eclipsed any of the season, a total of 317,320 pounds being disposed of at an average of $12.26. This was the record sale of the season so far as the size of the offering was concerned, both floors being well filled. A number of wagons were left over for Tuesday's sale.

The market was strong, and the bidding was spirited, as evidenced by the fine averages of the crops sold.

A large quantity of tobacco of good quality was on the market, but quite a number of farmers are marketing their low grades and leaving the best of their crops in the barn, which very materially reduces the averages.

For the entire week a total of 331,725 pounds were sold at an average of $12.61, an average far above that obtained at any house in Central Kentucky.

Tobacco growers and handlers are beginning to realize that the Paris market is one of the best in Central Kentucky, if not in the entire State. Growers from several of the surrounding counties have sent their crops to the Bourbon Tobacco Warehouse to be disposed of, the excellent prices obtained on the local market deciding them as against other markets.

The best average was realized on the crops grown by C. R. White & Current, their offering of 2,320 pounds bringing the high average of $13.41.

Buyers from some of the largest tobacco manufacturing firms in the country were present at the sales and the competition among them for the choice offerings was ample evidence of the commercial value of the local market.

A feeling of optimism prevails among the local dealers and growers of tobacco, and the warehouse people expect bigger receipts of the 1913 crop this and next week, and anticipate an active market.

These sales of the 1913 crop are scattering lots of money through this and adjoining counties and furnishing farmers with ready cash to liquidate maturing obligations and to lay in their winter supplies. This feature of the situation in Paris is what interests home merchants and the cash proceeds of these sales has already manifested itself in trade channels in the Christmas buying. Taking all in all, the Bourbon Tobacco Warehouse is one of the best enterprises for local benefits Paris can boast of.

That confidence prevails in the stability of the Paris market goes without saying, and some high prices will be received in future sales when the different baskets pass under the auctioneer's hammer.

Following are some of the crop averages:

Patton & Hardwick, 4,210 pounds; average $11.86.
Hutson & LaRue, 5,405 pounds; average $14.20.
Martin & Cardwell, 3,460 pounds; average $13.17.
C. R. White & Current, 2,320 pounds; average $13.41.
Maher & Carmichael, 3,310 pounds; average $12.74.
Caywood & Fletcher, 3,090 pounds; average $12.57.
J. R. DeJarnette, 1,770; average $11.00.
Leer & Ryan, 7,960 pounds; average $11.00.
Caldwell & Overby, 5,400 pounds; average $13.10.
Faulconer & Wilson, 3,690 pounds; average $13.16.
Caywood & Pence, 7,725 pounds; average $13.24.
Ardery & Fookes, 6,030 pounds; average $15.51.
Jones & McDuff, 4,895 pounds; average $16.25.
Bell & Biddle, 3,710 pounds; average $15.18.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Schobe, of Salem, New Jersey, will arrive next week to be guests of Mrs. J. H. Butler and family.

COAL LOOMS BIG IN OLD KENTUCKY.

The principal mineral product of Kentucky is coal, which in value constitutes about three-fourths of the State's total mineral output. In 1912 the total value of Kentucky's mineral production was $22,452,984, of which the coal output made up $16,854,207, according to figures compiled by the United States Geological Survey, in cooperation with the Kentucky State Geological Survey. This increase in the total mineral production over 1911 is $2,156,370.

The clay working industry is second in importance in the State, with manufactured products in 1912 valued at $2,443,740, against $2,368,094 in 1911. The principal clay products are fire brick and other forms of refractory material made from fire clay and common brick.

The quarrying industry is third in importance, and its principal product is limestone, most of which is crushed for road-making, railroad ballast and concrete.

The value of the natural gas produced in Kentucky in 1912 was $497,909, against $507,689 in 1911; and that of petroleum $424,842, against $328,614 in 1911.

Kentucky is second among the States in the production of fluorspar and also produces barytes, asphalt, cement, iron ore, lead, lime, mineral paints, mineral waters, oilstones, sand and gravel, sand-lime brick, zinc and lithographic stone.

PATIENT HEROISM OF LEXINGTON CITIZEN.

One is accustomed to look to fields of battle for examples of heroism and nobility of character, but in our very midst, day after day a person may be holding specimens of heroism equal to any that was ever fought on the battle field. The writer has the pleasure of knowing such an example in the person of E. S. McClelland, of Lexington, who has for years been a patient in our local hospitals, and also in Chicago, and who has suffered the loss of both hands and both feet under the surgeon's knife.

Twenty years ago, as a bright-eyed, handsome youth, budding into manhood, he occupied the position as clerk and bookkeeper for one of Lexington's leading groceries, but, looking for broader fields, went West, where he enjoyed unusual prosperity. Without warning he was stricken down with one of the rarest nerve diseases known to the medical world, which puzzled the most eminent surgeons.

Five years of agony on hospital beds and twenty-three operations have left him in his present helpless state, but with his many handicaps he is not idle. Without hands he has learned to write perfectly, and with his indomitable pluck and energy has prepared to again take up life's battle for a livelihood with a smile. He has gotten out an attractive up-to-date magazine catalogue, which gives the lowest price obtainable on single magazines or club offers; and with great faith in the native goodness of mankind, he is confident of yet occupying a place in the busy world. (Lexington Herald.)

Catalogues have been mailed to a number of citizens in Paris, and Mr. McClelland will be glad to receive orders.

$71,000 ROBBERY.

Although details have not been given out a package addressed to a local bank containing $71,000 in U. S. Treasury notes was taken and a package of magazines substituted. The substitution was not found out until the package reached the bank, when the cashier found the bundle of "Laff" magazines. He started to read some of the stuff and became so interested that he agreed with the bank directors to make up the loss if they would place him on the subscription list of "Laff" for life. In order to get you in a good humor and help you to forget even your big troubles, domestic or financial, we will agree to send you "Laff" for one year at the ridiculously low price of 50 cents.

This National Magazine of Fun is making greater strides than any other magazine before the American public today. It is a magazine that will keep the whole family in a good humor. The staff of "Laff" contains artists, caricaturists, and writers who rank among the best in the country. It is highly illustrated and printed in colors. It will keep the whole family cheerful all the year 'round. You can afford to spend 50 cents a year to do this. Send this clipping and Fifty Cents today to the Publishers of Laff Dayton, O., for one year's subscription. The regular price is $1.00, and we are making this special offer to get acquainted. (adv.)

CALIFORNIA WOMAN SERIOUSLY ALARMED.

"A short time ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and caused me a great deal of annoyance. I would have had coughing spells and my lungs were so sore and inflamed I began to be seriously alarmed. A friend recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, saying she had used it for years. I bought a bottle and it relieved my cough the first night, and in a week I was rid of the cold and soreness of my lungs," writes Miss Marie Gerber, Sawtelle, Cal. For sale by all dealers. (adv.)

PHYSICAL EDUCATION SOCIETY CHOOSES HEAD

A meeting of the Kentucky Physical Education Society was held in the home of Mrs. Robert L. Stout, at the State University, in Lexington, Saturday morning. Routine business was attended to and the following officers were elected:

Memorial President, Baroness Rose Posse, president of Posse Normal School of Gymnastics, Boston, Mass.; President, Mrs. R. L. Stout, (Grad. N. H. N. S. G.), Physical Director of Women, University of Kentucky; Vice-President, Lieutenant James Lindgren, Louisville, (Grad. R. G. Stockholm, Sweden); Secretary, Miss Mary Anna Bean (Grad. N. H. N. S. G.), Supervisor of Physical Training, Lexington Public Schools.

The members of this society desire a larger membership. All persons having diplomas from accredited schools of gymnastics covering at least a two years' course in the medical theory and practice of gymnastics, will be cordially welcomed.

The following resolutions were adopted and spread upon the minutes:

"Be it resolved, That the term 'Physical Culture' be condemned as cheap and tawdry, and that editors of newspapers and all other educated persons be respectfully petitioned to discontinue the use of the obsolete term 'Physical Culture', substituting therefor the regulation and standard terms 'Physical Training' or 'Physical Education', or 'Gymnastics'; this for the reasons offered by the authors Dudley & Keller, in their book, 'Athletic Games for Women' and concurred in by all graduate physical directors, to-wit: 'It would be a good thing if the private schools would abolish the use of the term 'Physical Culture', which has come to mean almost anything. There are Physical Culture systems, restaurants and furniture.' It is pointed out by the society that every exercise offered in a gymnasium is based upon medical principles. The physical director does not explain this theory to classes for the same reason that the physician can not explain his prescription to a patient. The graduate physical director is therefore not a teacher but a medical expert."

"Be it resolved that we endorse the sentiments expressed in a recent editorial on modern dancing printed in the Review of Reviews and published in several leading papers, and in justice to physical educators, the attention of the public be drawn to the fact that modern social dancing, so called 'fancy dancing' and the ballet are in no way related to the classic dancing of the gymnasium. Such artists as Isadore Duncan and Miss St. Denis have done more towards reviving an art dead for two thousand years. The classic dance is an ideal form of exercise for the body and is as far from all social dancing as the stars are from the earth. The classic dance of the ancients was held in reverence as a fine art on the level of other fine arts—painting, poetry, music and sculpture. Its origin was sacred and to-day its theme is religious. The classic dance is an interpretation in rhythmic pose of the thoughts, inspirations and passions of the human soul. It has a loftiness—a melancholy dignity that lifts it high above all other form of the Terpsichorean Art. Many philosophers have discussed the subject in detail, namely Plato, Aristotle, Quintilian, Lucian and Aeschylus and others."

EASY TO FIND WATER WHEN IT'S IN A PIPE.

Friends of water and metals, who have been so hardly dealt with by the skeptical public, managed recently to turn the tables on their critics, particularly those of the former whose strong point is the discovery of water. The others did not not do so well.

The water experiments took place at a spot just outside Paris, and one diviner made a remarkable success. He was turned loose on a piece of waste ground under which ran a water supply pipe. Using his watch as a divining instrument, he actually indicated the course of the pipe, and also its depth in the ground.

Perhaps the most remarkable achievement was to state when the water was flowing and when it was not. It had previously been arranged that the water should be turned off at intervals, but that fact had not been mentioned to the diviner, who was a clergyman.

While this test was being conducted, the other diviners were trying their hands at finding metals, but not very successfully. The test was as follows: Seven envelopes were exhibited to the experimenters. Each contained a different metal, those used being lead, tin, silver, iron, copper, aluminum and zinc. Most of the magicians could only hazard guesses at the metals in the envelopes. One of them was right three times out of four, but only in the case of iron.

The indoor sittings of the Congress were rendered interesting by the discourse of Dr. Durvillie, who spoke of the way in which science explains the phenomenon of prevision of events.

Calculation, he said, was one method, instancing the calculations of astronomers and the prophecies of doctors with regard to the outcome of a conscious determination. But the more interesting method was that in which the question of the subconscious self came into play. This subconscious ego could foresee the machinations which would determine certain events of which we became warned as by intuition.

EYE DISEASE IN KENTUCKY
MENACES UNITED STATES.

Approximately one in every seven persons in the mountains of Eastern Kentucky is afflicted with trachoma, according to Dr. John McMullen, of the Public Health Service at Washington.

This dreaded infection of the eyes—a least evidence of which would cause Uncle Sam to deport immigrants at Ellis Island—is entrenched in an almost impregnable stronghold in the United States.

The scourge now prevalent in the eastern part of Kentucky and other sections of the Appalachian mountain range is a national menace, United States public health surgeons say. The germs may be carried in a hundred different ways.

Hundreds of infected mountaineers are now being treated in two newly established hospitals. Many of them are stone blind, many are losing their sight, and others are in the early stages of the disease, where simple surgical operations and care will save them. Before many weeks, according to Dr. John McMullen, a score of similar hospitals will have been set up and manned by able men.

"Trachoma is terribly infectious," said Dr. McMullen. "It is transmitted by means of the common roller towel, the mode in which some of the people live—large families crowded together—and even the railroads are agencies which spread the infection far and wide."

"The pathetic side of the situation can only be seen by one actually engaged in ministering to the afflicted," continued Dr. McMullen. "Conceive if you can, a family of 15 persons crowded into a small mountain home. Three generations are living under one roof, the poor old grandfather and grandmother stone blind from the ravages of trachoma."

"The stalwart mountaineer—the father of the family, suffering from 'sore eyes' and refuses to leave the inner darkness of the house."

"Inside is his wife—the mother of 11 children—also afraid to face the sunlight. About the front yard are several of the children. Their eyes are sore and watery. The family is destitute."

The mountaineers are taking kindly to Government intervention. Many of them walk 20 miles to be treated. The two hospitals already established are miles from railroads.

MONEY TO MODEL ROAD.

The Government is determined to build the model road in Montgomery county, and this week agreed to add a further sum of $2,500 to their appropriations already made, leaving a balance to be raised of $5,000 along the route. Committees have been appointed to raise the necessary amount. It is believed that it will be done by February 1, and actual work on the road will begin as soon as the weather will permit it in the early spring.

COMPROMISE JUDGMENT IN
NICHOLAS TOBACCO SUIT

A compromise judgment was entered in the Nicholas County Court Friday in the action of the Commonwealth of Kentucky against the Burley Tobacco Society for alleged back taxes, whereby the Burley Tobacco Society is assessed with $7,555 for the years 1911, 1912 and 1913, and judgment entered for taxes for those years to the amount of $271.98 and $34.40 penalty, a total of $326.28 for the three years. COMFORT IN FOOTWEAR

An old method of "breaking in" shoes, as simple as it is effective, has been adopted by the army after a careful investigation of the best ways and means to that end. The directions are:

After the shoe has been fitted, stand in water up to the tops of them until the leather is thoroughly soaked. Then begin a "hike" and continue walking until the shoes are perfectly dry.

Footwear so treated, the soldiers assert, conforms to every peculiarity of heel, arch and toe and remains comfortable.

Why not try this cure for pedal complaints, all ye civilians with corns and bunions?

FOURTH CLASS KENTUCKY
OFFICES TO BE PROBED

The Post-office Department Friday detailed a corps of inspectors to make a whirlwind trip through Kentucky to investigate charges that have been filed against 125 fourth-class postmasters. It instructed its secret agents to perform this task within a fortnight and to submit their reports to Washington as soon as possible. The action was taken by Chief Inspector Johnston, at the suggestion of Postmaster General Burleson, who is anxious that the work in Kentucky shall be completed before wintry weather makes many of the roads in the State difficult to travel. A score or more of the fourth-class offices whose postmasters are under fire are situated in out-of-the-way communities, and Postmaster General Burleson as well as his subordinates realize that if the investigation of pending charges is deferred until after the holidays that the unimproved roads will be in such a condition that inspectors will be greatly handicapped in carrying out their mission.

There are about 1,000 fourth-class post-offices in Kentucky, one-eighth of which will be visited by inspectors who will probe charges ranging from inefficiency and neglect of duty to pernicious political activity that were recently filed against these postmasters.

EASY FOR THE HENS.

Among the additions to Washington society during the last year was a newly rich family from the West. The head of this family soon bought a country place across the Potomac in Virginia and entered upon a course of amateur farming. It would appear, however, from an incident related by a friend of the family that it mattered little in their case whether the crops were good or bad.

One day his friend was being shown over the place by the owner's wife, who proudly enumerated the attractions of the place and the valuable assets thereof. "We have, as you see," said she, "horses, cows, pigs, hens and—"

"How nice!" interrupted the visitor. "You can have all the fresh eggs you want every day."

The mistress hesitated. "Of course," said she, "the hens may lay if they wish to, but, really, in our position it isn't at all necessary that they should."

GOLD DREDGING IN ALASKA.

Thirty-eight gold dredges were operated in Alaska in 1912, compared with 27 in 1911, according to the United States Geological Survey. In addition to these, a dozen or more were in various stages of construction. It is estimated that these dredges handled between 3,200,000 and 3,600,000 cubic yards of material, recovering gold to the value of about $2,200,000.

BOOTH'S HUMOR SATIRICAL

At times Edwin Booth's humor was satirical. When leaving a church in Boston after the funeral of the eminent essayist and critic, Edwin Percy Whipple—obsequies which he had attended in company with Lawrence Barrett, and during which he had been annoyed as well as amused by the convulsive facial contortions of the officiating clergyman—he remarked to Barrett:

"I knew Mr. Whipple, but I never expected I should be so sorry to attend his funeral."

When a stage struck lunatic named Mark Gray attempted to murder him in Chicago, at a performance of "King Richard II" (April 3, 1879, at McVicker's Theatre), firing at him twice with a pistol from a place in the second balcony, Booth calmly advanced to the front of the stage and, pointing at the madman, directed that he be seized, and then, after a brief absence from the stage to reassure his wife, composedly finished his performance. Later he caused one of the bullets to be extracted from a piece of scenery where it had lodged, and had it mounted as a charm for his watch chain, inscribed "To Edwin Booth from Mark Gray." That sinister relic he customarily wore.

GRASS SEED STOLEN FROM FAYETTE MAN SOLD HERE.

H. Price Headley, a prominent farmer of Fayette county, has been the victim of a clever thief for the past six months, during which time 350 bushels of grass seed were stolen from him and sold to a Paris firm. John Leak, a Lexington negro, who cleverly executed the theft, is being held in Lexington. Regarding the negro, his method of operating the clever scheme, and the work of the Lexington police in detecting him, Lexington Leader has the following:

"John Leak, colored, was arrested Tuesday for loitering, having robbed Mr. Headley of nearly 350 bushels of blue grass seed during the past six months. Wednesday afternoon he made a full confession.

"The attention of Chief of Detectives Malcolm Brown was recently attracted by the large quantities of blue grass seed being shipped from Lexington to Paris on the interurban car that leaves here before 6 o'clock in the morning. These shipments were repeated at regular intervals and although no complaint had been made inquiry which started at the farm of Mr. S. L. VanMeter, on the Bryant Station pike and extended to other large producers of grass seed failed to show that any of them were sending seed to Paris.

"Reports from the Paris firm to which shipments were made stated that they knew nothing of the shipper except that he had requested all the checks for him to be sent in care of a local grocer. The grocer was notified that the next time a check was called for to telephone the detective department. On Tuesday Leak required for his check, the detectives were notified, and he was taken into custody on a charge of loitering.

"Under questioning at police headquarters Wednesday Leak at first said he had the seed stored at a house on Bright avenue, then that he was selling it for a friend, and finally that it had come from the farm of Mr. H. Price Headley, on the old Frankfort pike. Mr. Headley was notified, and on investigation found that some forty-nine sacks, containing nearly 350 bushels of grass seed, had been taken.

"A full confession was obtained from Leak, who said he had been taking the seed since last June. Leak explained his method by saying that he would hire a mule from the stock yards and a wagon from another part of the city and drive to the Headley farm and 'load up', put the seed on the early interurban car to Paris and later get his check from the grocery store.

"His last shipment to Paris had amounted to twelve sacks, and it is estimated by Mr. Headley that during the past few months fifty sacks of blue grass seed, valued at about $325, have been taken from the barn, and the loss might have been much greater but for the detective's good work, it is believed, as Mr. Headley is on his old Frankfort pike farm but little now, as he is making his home on his farm on the Harrodsburg pike."

"DEAD BEATS" CANNOT GET GOVERNMENT JOBS.

There is no place in the Government service for persons who refuse to pay their honest debts. This was made clear Tuesday, when the Postmaster General notified a member of the Kentucky delegation that he would not receive for serious consideration the recommendation of any candidate for a postmastership that had the unsavory reputation of being a "dead beat."

An investigation showed that in rendering this decision Postmaster General Burleson merely voiced the general rule that has been laid down regarding the qualifications of all candidates for berths in the Government service. The purpose of the Administration, it is said, is to appoint men of high grade to responsible Federal positions.

THEATRICAL.

"Peg O' My Heart" at The Lyric

Oliver Morosco will present at the Lyric Theatre, in Cincinnati, week commencing Dec. 14th, his production of J. Hartley Manners' overwhelmingly successful comedy, "Peg O' My Heart," which has broken all the dramatic records of a decade at the New York's Cort Theatre.

"Peg O' My Heart" opened the New Cort Theatre, the most beautiful play house in America, last season, and instantly the little white-marbled palace became the local point of audience attention for the entire city.

"Peg O' My Heart" rapidly crept in public favor until it was neck to neck with that supreme sensation, "Within the Law," and at last, in the early summer, actually passed that piece in point of monetary figures, a lead which it afterward steadily maintained.

The extraordinary success of "Peg O' My Heart" is unquestionably accounted for by its humanity and its wholesomeness—two elements which in these days of bizarre mechanical plots and tawdry sexuality are put so far in the background as to be almost mythological.

Peg, the little Irish-American girl, is as witty as a character of Thackeray's pen; she is as philosophical as a Balzac jeune fille who has the quaint pathos of a Dickens' person—a being from a world of hard facts, certain sorrows and evanescent joys, with a touch of melancholy sobering the brightness of her laughter, and with smiles that tremble for the small irresponsible tears behind them.

"Peg O' My Heart" proved conclusively that New York can still laugh heartily and sincerely at humor which is not coarse, and that simple story, directly and simply told, is more potent than any plot, fantastic, complex or merely outlandish.

PROFIT IN RAISING
SUNFLOWER SEED.

Lee Phillips, a farmer residing in the vicinity of Three States, ten miles below Hickman, Ky., has found much profit in raising sunflowers for their seed. Mr. Phillips tried the crop more as an experiment, the flood having covered his entire farm, and ruined his large corn crop, which he had gotten planted early, and when finally the water had subsided and his ground was dry enough to plant again, the season was entirely too late to plant another crop of corn, so he planted the sunflower seed as an experiment, one which has proven quite remunerative and also established the fact that in this territory sunflowers can be profitably raised. The sunflower seed which he planted cost him $1.20 per acre, and he did not succeed in getting a good stand, but the yield when harvested amounted to 60,000 pounds of seed, which he sold at three cents a pound, bringing him $1,800.

He had no labor or expense cultivating, as he did not plow them or do anything after planting until the harvesting time. As is a well-known fact, the sunflower turns its face to the sun, facing the east in the morning and the west in the afternoon, and in planting the crop, it is planted in rows extending north and south, which makes it easy to gather, the wagons driving along the way he flowers are facing and threshing the seed off into a wagon. The experiment is wholly new and novel in this State, and is attracting much attention.

FARMER SAYS RABBITS ARE FOES OF ORCHARD TREES

"The rabbit is the most diabolical animal in this country. He's a regular four-footed English sparrow," declares State Farmer Charles McIntyre, of Ohio, who is up in arms over the State Game and Fish Commission's plan to pass laws this winter limiting the number of "bunnies" hunters may kill.

"Rabbits are doing more to discourage orcharding in Ohio than any other factor. Each year they kill thousands of young fruit trees. As soon as there's a little snow on the ground they start in barking the shoots. Farmers can't head their trees low because the infernal little nuisances will hop along, rear right up on their hind legs and nibble off the young limbs."

McIntyre is on the warpath. He says he'll head farmers in a fight against the proposed laws.

"There ought to be a bounty for killing them instead of a restriction on them," he declares.

"Skunks, smell and all, are a boon to farmers compared to rabbits. They bore down and destroy the grub worms that kill out our crops. The only thing that a rabbit is fit for is to lay Easter eggs!"

CALIFORNIA GYPSY KING AND FAMILY USE AUTO.

(Los Angeles Examiner.) Although nearly everybody drives an automobile these days, the modern vehicle had not been used as a conveyance for gypsies until John Merino, the Servian Gypsy King, of Los Angeles, purchased a machine to transport his young and growing family.

Merino, accompanied by his wife and four children, arrived from Honolulu on the liner China of San Francisco, recently. The automobile was stored upon the main deck in a prominent place, where it could be seen by all of the passengers.

The Gypsy King is in the horse trading business. He has a ranch near Los Angeles, where from fifty to sixty horses are always kept.

When the Merino family travel on business they shift about in the automobile. Remaining in the camp for weeks at a time, the father in the automobile travels about the district looking for horses.

Coins linked in chains about the throats of Mrs. Merino and her two daughters represent $2,000 in American and British gold. Diamonds and jewels valued at $20,000 had been stored with the purser of the steamer.

CITY HEALTH BOARD MEETS AND PERFECTS ORGANIZATION

A meeting of the City Health Board, elected at the regular meeting of the City Council, and composed of Dr. C. J. Clarke, Monroe Mansfield and Dr. F. P. Campbell, met at the office of Dr. A. H. Keller, in the Elks' Building, Saturday morning, and organized with the election of Dr. Campbell as president and Dr. A. H. Keller as Health Officer and secretary.

After the organization the Board took up for discussion many points of interest looking to the welfare of the health of the community. These matters were discussed from every angle, and the Board will in the future exercise every energy in the effort to improve the health conditions in this city, which at the present time, through the vigilance and painstaking methods employed places this community in the front ranks of the most healthful of the State.

Dr. Keller, who was the choice of the Board for re-election, begins his third term as City Health Officer. During his incumbency he has made an untiring official, and with the cooperation of the citizens of Paris the health of the city will be advanced to a point hitherto unknown to a community of a like size.

SCIENCE AND THE BURGLAR.

Modern Inventions Utilized By the Learned Raffles in His Profession.

(Harper's Weekly.) Science, while aiding mankind in all sorts of beneficent ways, is at the same time aiding the crackman to pursue his nefarious work with much more neatness and dispatch, and with less danger to himself, than ever before. The modern burglar now spurns the clumsy outfit of crowbar, jimmies, and skeleton keys. He knows a trick worth a dozen of those. He carries a few ounces of nitroglycerine, a cylinder or two of oxygen and acetylene, and a blowpipe. With these easily concealed tools he can force his way through the toughest steel.

The blowpipe is the deadly enemy which the safe manufacturer is now trying, with the aid of science, to circumvent. Under the intense heat that it generates the strongest steel crumples up like paper. A circle some two feet in diameter can be cut through the metal, even if an inch thick, in a few minutes.

A steel plate which a shell from a four-inch gun fails to dent will fall an easy victim to a few cubic feet of oxygen and acetylene gas in combination. When the thermite process for welding iron was discovered, advantage was immediately taken of this for the purpose of burning through plates of steel.

Deadly forces must be handled with care, and an exact knowledge of the power of which they are capable. It is not for the reckless or the bungler to toy with the blowpipe of nitroglycerine. So Raffles sets to work to acquire a scientific knowledge and skill of manipulation that, if put to some legitimate use, might open up to him an honorable career.

Quite recently a safe-breaker, whose successful career was suddenly halted by the law, fairly amazed the expert scientists by the completeness of his library, which comprised a valuable collection of books in French and German written by scientists. He made a specialty of the subject of the force of the blowpipe on metals. He admitted that he had spent three years in this study. A laboratory adjoining his library was small and compact, but for completeness of equipment would have done credit to a science school. In this laboratory he had made some improvements.

No sooner does the scientist discover some tremendous force than he must set to work to counteract that force in the hands of the criminal. It is said that recent experiments have produced a steel that will even withstand the blast of the blowpipe.

LYT LAWRENCE RUNS AMUCK; RESISTS POLICE OFFICERS

Lyt Lawrence, a young white man, became involved in a difficulty in the saloon of M. L. Woods, on Main street, Saturday night, and when he was ejected from the place, he became very boisterous, and was placed under arrest by Chief of Police J. C. Elgin and Patrolman Chas. Thomas. Lawrence, it is alleged, was badly cut in the arm in the saloon. When placed under arrest he resisted the officers and for two squares on the way to the jail he continued a lively struggle. At the corner of Main and Sixth streets, taking Chief Elgin off his guard, he grabbed his club from his hand and struck the officer across the head. Partly stunned by the blow Chief Elgin released his hold on Lawrence, who grappled with Patrolman Thomas, and succeeded in releasing himself. He ran out Sixth street.

Patrolman Thomas fired two shots in the direction of the fleeing man, but neither of them took effect. A short time afterward Lawrence was arrested by Patrolman James Moreland on the Maysville pike, and it was with some difficulty he was landed in jail. He was suffering with a deep wound in the arm, and was taken to the hospital, where his injuries were dressed. His condition is not thought to be serious.

Following the difficulty in which Lawrence made his escape from the officers a report was circulated and gained publicity that Chief Elgin was fatally hurt as a result of the blow on the head, and that he had been taken to the hospital. This originated from the story that Lawrence had been removed to that institution. The report in regard to the condition of Mr. Elgin was without foundation, and after a short time he had recovered sufficiently to continue on duty. Aside from a few slight bruises he suffered no other injuries.

TALENTED SOLOISTS WITH THE ELLERY BAND.

Messrs. Wallace and Young, the Scottish soloists with the Ellery Band, completely captured the people of Nashville, Tenn., during the band's recent visit to that city, Dec. 1. Of Mr. Wallace, the Nashville Banner says: "He has one of the finest tenor voices ever heard in this city, and his rendition of 'I Hear You Calling Me' caused such a burst of enthusiasm that the audience would not be satisfied until he had responded several times to the call. Of Mr. Young, seldom, outside of a grand opera star, has as rich a baritone been heard here as that of Mr. Young, and his singing of the 'Prologue' from 'Pagliacci' was indeed a rare treat, a storm of applause greeting the rendition of this number. Mr. Ellery's piano accompaniments contributed much to the beauty of the songs." Mr. Ellery will be here himself with the band, which will give two concerts at the Paris Grand on Saturday, Dec. 20, matinee and evening. Reserved seat sale goes on at Mitchell & Blakemore's, Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock.

MOTHERS' DAY OBSERVED AT THE PARIS PUBLIC SCHOOL.

"Mother's Day" was observed with appropriate exercises at the public school Friday afternoon. A musical program was held in the chapel, consisting of selections by the High School Band, a chorus, and several numbers on the Victrola. After the recital the guests were invited to visit the rooms, which were appropriately decorated, and in which the everyday work of the pupils was displayed. No effort was made for an extra display.

The gymnasium was also visited, where drills were given by several of the grades, and the afternoon closed with a basketball game by the boys' team. At the chapel exercises Albert Lave announced the program and the numbers played by the Victrola were explained by Barnett Winter and Stuart Wallingford. A good crowd was in attendance and much interest was manifested in the work and progress of the pupils.

LUKE McLUKE SAYS

There are two sides to every deal. I saw a man get on a Vine-Norwood car. He carried two large potted ferns, a suit case and a package about the size of an ironing board. He occupied two seats and an entire corner and, when the car began to get crowded, he said to his neighbor: "Why the hell don't the Traction Company put on more cars?"

Nowadays when you try to kill two birds with one stone you miss both birds. Well, they are here at last, fellers. You can see them in the windows, and I guess maybe some are being worn. They are loose and accordion pleated and fasten around the ankles with ribbons. They ain't quite as natural looking as the ones we hang on to our suspenders, but they are a pretty good bluff for a starter. The British committee wants to toss the caber added to the Olympic Games because the Scotch athletes would have no competition. If that is the case we will add Throwing the Bull to the list and we will have a walk over.

D. D. D. In Hospitals; Standard Skin Cure

How many hospital patients, suffering from the frightful itch, the raw scorching pain of skin disease, have been soothed to sleep by a soothing fluid washed in by the nurse's hands?

That fluid is the famous D. D. D. prescription for eczema.

THE SUPERVISING NURSE of one of our prominent Catholic institutions (name of nurse and institution on application), writes regarding a patient: "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D. D. D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

How many eczema sufferers are paying their doctors for regular treatment and are being treated with this same soothing, healing fluid?

DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly

CHAS. E. BUTLER & CO.

writes "D. D. D. is superior to anything I have ever found. Soft and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D. D. D. Prescription must be applied according to directions given in the pamphlet around every bottle. Follow these directions—and see!

And it certainly takes away the itch at once—the moment the fluid is applied. The skin is soothed—calmed—so thoroughly refreshed—delightfully cooled.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific as well as the efficient D. D. D. Skin Soap.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.

Lumbago-Sciatica Sprains

"The directions says, its good for lumbago too.—Sloan's cured my rheumatism; I've used it and I know." Do you use Sloan's?

Here's Proof.

"I had my back hurt in the Boer War and two years ago I was hit by a street car. I tried all kinds of dope without success. I saw your Liniment in a drug store and got a bottle to try. The first application caused instant relief, and now except for a little stiffness, I am almost well."—Fletcher Norman, Whittier, Calif.

Instant Relief from Sciatica

"I was kept in bed with sciatica since the first of February, but I had almost instant relief when I tried your Liniment."—W. H. Beckwith, Frankfort, Ky.

Sprained Ankle

"As a user of your Liniment for the last 15 years, I can say it is one of the best on the market. Fifteen years ago I sprained my ankle and had to use crutches, and the doctors said I would always be lame. A friend advised me to try your Liniment and after using it night and morning for three months I could walk without a cane and run as good as any of the other fellows in my department. I have never been without a bottle since that time."—Mr. William H. Briscoe, Central Islip, N. Y.

MRS. BRECKINRIDGE
A VICE PRESIDENT.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, of New York, President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, was re-elected for the eighth term at the annual balloting for officers in Washington, at last Thursday's session of the association. Dr. Shaw was opposed by Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, of Warren, O. The other officers elected were:

First Vice President—Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Desha Breckinridge, of Lexington, Ky.

Third Vice President—Mrs. Caroline Ruutz-Rees, of Greenwich, Conn.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Susan Fitzgerald, of Boston.

Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, of Boston.

Treasurer—Mrs. Katherine Dexter McCormick, of Boston.

First Auditor—Harriet Burton Laidlaw, of New York.

Second Auditor—Louise DeKoven Bowen, of Chicago.

Adoption of a new constitution and election of officers occupied Thursday's session of the association. Many hours of discussion preceded the final vote on the constitution.

While the new system of government does not place the finances of the association on a budget basis entirely, to which there has been vigorous objection, a large portion of the money needed will be raised in accordance with a budget adopted in advance each year. When it was announced at the afternoon session that $11,850 would have to be provided in pledges to complete the total of $23,625 previously adopted for the budget it took less than four hours to secure the sum.

HEALS ITCHY ECZEMA.
DR. HOBSON'S OINTMENT

The constantly itching, burning sensation and other disagreeable forms of eczema, tetter, salt rheum, and skin eruptions promptly cured by Dr. Hobson's Eczema Ointment.

GEO. W. FITCH, of Mendota, Ill., says: "I purchased a box of Dr. Hobson's Eczema Ointment. Have had eczema ever since the civil war, have been treated by many doctors, but none have given the benefit that one box of Dr. Hobson's Eczema Ointment has." Every sufferer should try it. We're so positive it will help you we guarantee it or money refunded. At all druggists or by mail, 50 cents.

It Can't Be Done.

"What we want," said the patriotic citizen, "is a government that will give every man an absolute equal show." "It can't be arranged," replied Three-Finger Sam; "anyway, not here in Crimmon Gulch. There's no sense in expecting everybody to have four aces when a jack pot is opened."—Washington Star.

GROUP AND COUGH REMEDY

Croup is a terrible disease; it attacks children so suddenly they are very apt to choke unless given the proper remedy at once. There is nothing better in the world than Dr. King's New Discovery. Lewis Chamberlain, of Manchester, O., writes about his children: "Sometimes in severe attacks we were afraid they would die, but since we proved what a certain remedy Dr. King's New Discovery is, we have no fear. We can rely on it for croup, coughs, and colds." So can you. 50c. and $1.00. A bottle should be in every home. At all druggists. H. E. Bucklen & Co., Philadelphia, St. Louis. (adv.) (Dec.)

Strong Comparison.

A brakeman in Altoona was speaking of the bad weather. "It's as bad," he said, "as the third band in a circus parade."

FIT HIS CASE EXACTLY.

"When father was sick about six years ago he read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Tablets in the papers that fit his case exactly," writes Miss Margaret Campbell, of Ft. Smith, Ark. "He purchased a box of them and he has not been sick since. My sister had stomach trouble and was also benefited by them." For sale by all dealers. (Dec.) (adv.)

CALUMET
BAKING POWDER

—And it does better work. Simply follow your customary method of preparation—add a little less of Calumet than when using ordinary baking powder. Then watch the result. Light, fluffy, and evenly raised—the baking comes from the oven more tempting, tastier, more wholesome.

You don't save money when you buy cheap or big-can baking powder. Don't be misled. Buy Calumet. It's more economical—more wholesome—gives better results. Calumet is far superior to sour milk and soda.

—Carl Hauser, a farmer of near Shelbyville, lost three horses valued at $600, as the result of eating voracious ensilage which had been removed from his silo and thrown out on the ground as a fertilizer.

If father comes home in a good humor and asks the kids if they would like to go to the picture show with him, Mother always snorts out: "If you have any money to spend on foolishness you'd better give it to me. The children need shoes better than they do picture shows." And if father comes home with a grouchy and gives the kids short answers, Mother swells up and says: "The poor children do not know they have a father. Other men take their children out once in a while and let them have a good time."

The Tortures of Rheumatism

are aggravated during climatic changes because the impure blood is incapable of resistance and ordinary treatment seems useless—but the fame of Scott's Emulsion for relieving rheumatism is based on logical principles and scientific facts. This oil-food promptly makes active, red, life-sustaining blood corpuscles and its body-building properties regulate the functions to expel poisonous acids.

Scott's Emulsion, with careful diet for one month, will relieve the lame muscles and stiffened joints and subdue the unbearable sharp pains when other remedies fail.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT PASSED BY STATE TRUSTEES

The following resolutions of the Board of Trustees of the State University of Kentucky on the death of Hon. Cassius M. Clay, of Bourbon county, were passed at a meeting of the Board held in Lexington Tuesday.

It is with sincere regret that the Board of Trustees of the State University of Kentucky, record the severance of their official relations with Hon. Cassius M. Clay by his voluntary resignation of the office of Trustee which he held by appointment for nearly twelve consecutive years. His eminent ability, his fine education, broad, liberal thought; his high character for honor and integrity, his distinguished reputation for patriotism and practical statesmanship, and his unswerving loyalty to the best interests of the Commonwealth, all combine to make him a Kentuckian and an American of the highest type. During his long connection with the Board of Trustees, Mr. Clay gave dignity and prestige to its proceedings. His straightforwardness, his manliness, his well defined opinions upon organization and policy, his utter impartiality and the energy and earnestness and intelligent breadth of grasp with which he expressed his convictions never failed to make a deep impression on his colleagues. By all he said and did the conviction was borne in upon all, here is a just man and a great man in whom justice and truth are the impelling and controlling elements of his being.

During the forty-eight years of its existence, the State College, now the State University of Kentucky, had no more distinguished director of its organization and management, no more scholarly guide in framing and coordinating its policies, and no more impartial arbiter in difference which emerged in relation to its activities and control.

The untimely death of this distinguished man adds poignancy to the regret felt because of his voluntary severance of his relations with us. Not the State University only but his State and the Nation are distinctly poorer today because of the passing of such a man. In the language of the Latin poet whom he loved so well, "Quis desiderio sit pudor aut modus Tam cari capitis."

When Milton bewailed the untimely death of Lycidas, Lycidas was young; Mr. Clay, though somewhat advanced in years, was young in spirit, full of intellectual vitality and vigor, in full accord with all his efforts to advance and elevate mankind. In him was youth matured by experience, but youth still. With equal sorrow and regret we may paraphrase the language of Milton:

"Lycidas is dead, dead while in his prime,
Who would not mourn for Lycidas?"

ANDREW POOR?

Has Given Away Near $400,000,000, Keeping Only $25,000,000 For Change.

Andrew Carnegie and poverty are terms that it would seem could hardly be used in a co-relative sense.

And yet the famous ironmaster is, comparatively speaking, a poor man. Carnegie's passion for philanthropy has brought his immense fortune down within striking distance of the $25,000,000 mark.

Carnegie, it was learned recently, has given away nearly all his millions upon millions of United States Steel Corporation bonds. If he lives a few more years he can be reasonably certain of having attained his ambition of having disposed of his mammoth wealth, with the exception of his $25,000,000 "sinking fund."

Carnegie's secretary recently gave out the following list of Carnegie's principal benefactions:

Carnegie Corporation of New York, $125,000,000; Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, $10,000,000; Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, $16,125,000; Carnegie Institute, Washington, D. C., $22,000,000; Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, $22,000,000; Carnegie Endowment for Carnegie Hero Fund Commission and gifts to libraries (estimated) $60,000,000; total, $265,125,000.

To this total may be added possibly $100,000,000 of miscellaneous gifts to thousands of individuals, institutions and private philanthropies. This will bring the grand total almost up to the staggering sum of $400,000,000.

STOMACH TROUBLES DISAPPEAR

Stomach, liver and kidney troubles, weak nerves, lame back and female ills disappear when Electric Bitters are used. Thousands of women would not be without a bottle in their home. Eliza Pool, of Depew, Okla., writes: "Electric Bitters raised me from a bed of sickness and suffering and has done me a world of good. I wish every suffering woman could use this excellent remedy and find out, as I did, just how good it is." As it has helped thousands of others, it surely will do the same for you. Every bottle guaranteed, 50c. and $1.00. At all druggists. H. E. Bucklen & Co., Philadelphia or St. Louis.

WINCHESTER SHAKEN UP BY DYNAMITE EXPLOSION

The premature explosion of a box of dynamite in the rear of the freight depot at the union station in Winchester, where D. B. Lacy & Son, contractors on the L. & N., are engaged in work, caused considerable damage Tuesday morning. The explosion shook every house in the town and buildings near the depot were badly damaged and windows demolished.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portions of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is nearly always caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or impaired hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOW TO BANKRUPT DOCTORS.

A prominent New York physician says "If it were not for the thin stockings and thin soled shoes worn by women the doctors would probably be bankrupt." When you contract a cold do not wait for it to develop into pneumonia, but treat it at once. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is intended especially for coughs and colds, and has won a wide reputation by its cures of these diseases. It is most effective and is pleasant and safe to take. HAD CATARRH FIVE YEARS.

Mr. Johnson of St. Elmo, Illinois, was troubled five years with catarrh. The catarrh was so severe in his case that his life seemed threatened. As he expressed himself, he had "one foot in the grave." Of course he tried to get relief. Many practitioners were consulted and a catarrh specialist in St. Louis was tried. He got so weak and thoroughly run down that he declares he could not walk more than a hundred yards without resting. Few people understand that catarrh is a constant drain on the system. The discharge of mucus which is going on in such cases is largely composed of blood serum, and is a great waste. Sooner or later it will weaken the strongest man.

According to reports received from Mr. Johnson, he was in a desperate condition, but he found relief from his trouble. We will let him say how he found it. His own words say: "My friends told me to take Peruna, and I did so. I now feel that Peruna has saved my life. It is the best medicine on earth, and I would not be without it."

This seems almost too good to be true. No doubt there are some readers that will think so. The above statements, however, can be verified by writing Mr. Johnson. Every home should be provided with the last edition of "The Ills of Life," sent free by the Peruna Co., Columbus, Ohio.

NOT INCLINED TO LIMIT HEALTH BOARD'S POWER

"We are not inclined to take the narrow view that the broad powers conferred on a local Board of Health can be exercised only when epidemics actually exist when the cause of sickness is such as to amount to a nuisance," said the Court of Appeals, Tuesday, Judge Hannah writing the opinion, reversing the Kenton Circuit Court, which granted an injunction restraining the Covington Board of Health from enforcing a stringent regulation of the city dairies, one of which required milk to be transported in sealed, transparent bottles.

Henry Kollman, a dairyman, refused to comply with this requirement, and secured the injunction. The Court said "the most effective way to prevent disease is to remove the cause thereof," and if the local Board considered this regulation essential to the protection of the health of the community, the Court would not interfere unless the regulation should appear to be "unreasonable or oppressive." The Court said it was neither, and that the powers of local Boards of Health are not derived from the City Council, but from the statutes.

LIVE AND LET LIVE

Is a motto we all ought to follow. If you expect the merchants of your town to remain with you and continue in business you must give them your patronage. I have been in your midst for three years. I was told by many before coming that my being here was a necessity, yet there are many people of the community who make their purchases in my line, as well as in others, away from home, when we are prepared to sell you from stock or make you a satisfactory order of anything you may desire for less money than you can buy it for elsewhere. The only way you can hope for your home merchants to thrive is to patronize them. If I am worth anything to the town and the community I must have your patronage, and the other business people of the town must have mine. I buy nothing away from Millersburg that can be bought here. Let's keep our money at home. Live and let live. If you expect me to remain in your midst I must have a liberal share of your patronage, otherwise I must shape my career from the country new.

He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Tilford Hinkle, prominent and well-to-do people of near Little Rock.

Besides his parents, the young man is survived by the following sisters and brothers: Mrs. Nora Gutt, of Cincinnati; Misses Margaret and Bertha Napier, and Maes, Leo and Jesse Napier, Jr., all of this city.

It is fitting to wish you Christmas Greetings and Christmas joys. The beautiful sentiment expressed in the celebration of this day enters into all our hearts. Peace and Good Will are not idle words to be idly spoken. Let our hearts utter them as well as our tongues, with a full understanding of what they mean, and a determined effort to convey that understanding in every sense of the word, and the resultant happiness will well repay the effort. A pleasure shared is a pleasure multiplied, and a kindly word is a seed that produces a plant prolific. May the spirit of Christmas be with you and fill your cup of happiness to the brim.

For some little time Santa Claus has been receiving letters from children all over the land. These sacred little epistles of love and confidence should be encouraged. They typify the childish idea of Santa Claus as a sort of a superior being, lovingly listening to their little appeals and granting them when possible. There is nothing that tends stronger towards the uplift of both children and older folks than devotion to an ideal.

The splendid work which this magazine section is accomplishing is illustrated by the following letter which has been received from Mr. John W. Newman, Commissioner of Agriculture of the State of Kentucky. Mr. Newman has made the uplift of agriculture his life work, and the results of his efforts have proved of the greatest possible benefit to the agricultural community.

MR. A. BART HORTON,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

My Dear Sir: In reply to yours of November 19, permit me to say that I am very much pleased with the magazine section that you are issuing as a supplement for the country weekly papers. This publication is attractively printed and the subject matter that it contains is such as will be of material aid to those farmers who read it. Let me urge you to make of this section practically an up-to-date farm monthly. Nothing could be of more value to the readers of the average weekly newspaper, and I believe such a magazine as this to be of more interest to them than a lot of detective stories, "Sketches from Barneo," and other useless reading matter that is often found in the magazine sections of newspapers. In other words, you are on the right track, and if you would develop this magazine into a great supplement principally devoted to farm matters, I am sure you will have the hearty support of the country newspapers, as it will be appreciated by their readers. So heartily do I believe in this that from time to time I will contribute such matter as is within my power to prepare, free of cost, in order to help the good work along.

Wishing you every success, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

J. W. NEWMAN, Commissioner of Agriculture.

Would $35.00 Per Week Interest You?

Would you like to be engaged in a business, in which you could not only make the above sum, or more, if the proper time and energy were devoted to the work, but in which you would be your own boss and could be the sole judge as to how your time could be employed most efficiently?

We want agents in your locality to represent the oldest Kentucky Old Line Life Insurance Company, which has more than fifty thousand policyholders in this State alone, and we have Supervisors who will instruct you in the work free of charge. We allow liberal commissions and a few applications written each week will easily earn for you the amount stated above. Will you try?

Christmas at Pleasant Valley

A Homely Story of a Family of Five Hundred

By A. Bart Horton

PLEASANT VALLEY was in a state of excitement. Christmas Day was the day of all days in the little town and this was an unusual Christmas Day. Long years ago the powers that ruled over the destinies of Pleasant Valley decreed that Christmas should be celebrated by the town as one large family, and this custom had been followed by father and son, mother and daughter to the present day. In the pioneer days of the state, when the chief pleasure of the Indians, resenting the intrusion of the white settler, had been to kill and slay, it had happened that the little band of settlers of Pleasant Valley had been threatened by a band of Indians. Torture and death seemed imminent on the dawn of Christmas Day, but relief came unexpectedly and providentially. Since then, each Christmas Day, the entire community gathered at one place, and these gatherings, growing as the town grew, took on new pleasures and devised new plans for the celebration. The spirit of Christmas spread throughout the year and the spirit of peace and good will prevailed universally. In short Pleasant Valley was about the happiest little community in the United States. Of course, it had its sickness and death and resultant sorrows, but Doctor Johnson was its refuge in these cases. It had occasionally its little tiffs, but Judge Johnson settled them and appeal from his decision was an unheard of proceeding. Sometimes there was want and Farmer Johnson was then usually called on.

The Johnsons were descendants of three of that little pioneer band and Dame Fortune had dealt kindly with them in many ways. Their farms were large and prosperous, but their fortunes were no larger than their hearts, and one of them was always on the "Christmas Commission" at Pleasant Valley. Every year at the celebration a member of this commission was elected to serve for a term of three years, and no member could be elected more than once during that period. Thus new ideas and different plans were devised each year, but there was always the big dinner in Farmer Johnson's big barn, and the big Christmas tree, with gifts for every one of the five hundred, big and little, rich and poor who lived in Pleasant Valley, and though these were the principal features of the day there were indoor and outdoor athletic events, and speaking and music, good and bad, and a big dance in the evening winding up with a Virginia Reel. The turkeys and little roast pigs that were grown especially for the occasion, and the pies and other good things for the dinner were prepared with the utmost care, and nobody was allowed to tell who contributed this or that to the feast. The "Christmas Commission" was by far the most important official body at Pleasant Valley, and for many months previous to that day they were making preparations. Children brought them pennies, older people saved a little here and there and sent them the savings and the wealthier residents contributed large sized sums, and no one but the commission knew what anyone gave. This particular year there was an unusual gift to be given and there was just enough mystery in connection with it to excite all Pleasant Valley. Every one who could be depended upon knew that Farmer Johnson was to be the recipient, excepting Farmer Johnson, who thought it was for someone else. Several years before an agri-done us lots of good, and that is a present fit for a king, for that bull is a wonder." So the Farmer wrote them a good sized check which the commission pocketed with sly winks at each other and many indications of suppressed smiles. Then to further the innocent deception they selected Farmer Johnson to make the presentation speech, and he accepted the honor with intense pleasure. It was his chief delight to make a speech. He was a good talker and he knew it, and furthermore wanted everybody else to know it. An event of this kind with the sentiment always surrounding Christmas gave him a splendid opportunity for the display of his silver tongue, and he set about preparing the speech of his life.

Christmas Day dawned bright and beautiful at Pleasant Valley. The white blanket of snow spreading to the slopes of the distant hills, glistened in the sunlight. At Farmer Johnson's house there was the usual celebration. All the members of the family gathered at the head of the stairs and Farmer Johnson with his youngest daughter, a fair haired tot of three, on his back led the procession downstairs and into the big parlor, where stood the Christmas tree wonderfully decorated and surrounded in the room by the presents of the family. How all the Johnsons, big and little loved that ceremony, how the little ones arose early and saw that every one else arose early, how they hastily dressed and anxiously awaited the appearance of their father and mother, and how they each sought their own little pile of gifts and expressed their pleasure and appreciation. It made indeed worth while all the trouble and work done by the Good Farmer and his wife. At the breakfast table, Tom Johnson, the eldest boy, home from college for the holidays, said to his father. "How's the speech, Father?" "Ask your mother, my boy," and his eyes shone with the anticipated pleasure before him. And Mother Johnson, to whom it had frequently been rehearsed, and who knew of her good husband's weakness, answered, "It's splendid, son, the best I ever heard." The Farmer looked at her lovingly, "And don't you except one, my dear, one I made to you in the long ago?" And she answered him, "That was not a speech; that was sacred music." After breakfast the Johnson household got busy, for soon the corps of helpers engaged from a nearby city would arrive, and farmers, and farmers' wives and farmers' children would drive in from the outlying farms in Pleasant Valley. Their own big kitchen was much too small for this occasion, and out in one end of the big barn a kitchen had been constructed long ago for these occasions.

At half past ten the athletic events started

Potatoes Parisienne

Cut potatoes into small, round pieces; then cook in salt water until done; pour off water, add lump of table butter, and fine chopped parsley.

Chestnut Dressing

Make turkey dressing of smothered onions, bread crumbs and boiled chestnuts.

Stuffing for Turkey (Family Style)

Soak one-fourth loaf of French bread or three water rolls (never use pan bread) in half milk, half water; squeeze out all the liquid, then add two medium sized onions, cut fine, and fried colorless in fresh butter; chop the liver of the turkey, and add to the onions; let smother two minutes longer. Add very little thyme, salt, pepper, fine chopped parsley, and two eggs.

Duchess Potatoes

To two cups hot diced potatoes add two tablespoons butter, one-half teaspoon salt, and yolks of three eggs slightly beaten. Shape, using pastry bag and tube, in form of baskets, pyramids, crowns, leaves, roses, etc. Brush over with beaten egg diluted with one teaspoon water, and brown in a hot oven.

Brussels Sprouts

Wash, clean well, leave boil until thoroughly done, same as cabbage. Strain them, put them in a pan with fresh butter and saute until they brown very little.

Louisiana Sweet Potatoes

Take half dozen large sweet potatoes. Boil until done, and peel them. Cut in thick slices, put in pan with a little molasses and brown light. Hollow out the top of each slice and add chopped nuts and sweet potatoes with cream and molasses and brown in hot oven.

Sweet Potatoes, Browned in Butter

Boil the sweet potatoes, peel and brown in butter.

Baked Apples

Peel and core apples, cut in quarters, put in baking dish with butter, sugar and cinnamon, bake slowly.

Planked White Fish

Take a good-sized whitefish, seasoned with salt and pepper, about 2½ pounds; lay on buttered plankboard; paste with fresh melted table butter, and bake in slow oven for three-fourths of an hour. Garnish with whole parsley and cut lemons.

Oyster Savarin

Open your oysters, take out of shell and cut them in small square pieces. Put in saucepan with one shallot chopped very fine, one-half glass white wine, and let simmer. Then take two red peppers, two green peppers, chopped very fine, and cook in fresh butter for five minutes, but be sure not to let the peppers brown. Then add peppers with oysters. Put in two large spoons of cream sauce, one yolk of an egg, juice of one lemon, season with salt, pepper and little paprika, and fill your oyster shells and besprinkle with a little grated Parmesan cheese and small piece of butter, and put in hot oven until they brown, and serve. (It takes two oysters to each shell after they are minced.)

Special Turkey Dressing

Soak one loaf bread in water, then take three to four onions and two stacks of celery chopped very fine, brown in a little butter, add the liver of turkey chopped fine, one-half pound sausage meat. Add these together and leave simmer on stove for fifteen minutes. Season with salt and pepper, one teaspoonful of sage, a little chopped parsley, two whole raw eggs. Stuff turkey with the above articles. Put in pan with few sliced vegetables, carrots, with butter. Leave turkey roast for two hours, but turn repeatedly until thoroughly cooked. Add glass of white wine to the sauce and vegetables, and strain, which will make a very fine sauce for the turkey.

Suckling Pig Dressing

Same dressing can be made by omitting celery and adding chestnuts or sliced apples.

Cream of Lima Beans

One cup dried lima beans, three pints cold water, two slices onion, four slices carrot, one cup milk, four tablespoons butter, two tablespoons flour, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon pepper.

Soak beans over night; in the morning drain and add cold water; cook until soft, and rub through a sieve. Cut vegetables in small cubes, and cook five minutes in half the butter; remove vegetables, add flour, salt, and pepper, and stir into boiling soup. Add cream, reheat, strain, and add remaining butter in small pieces.

Cream of Tomatoes

Slice two onions, two carrots, one leek finger, a few pieces of ham scraps and brown slightly in a little butter, then add three-fourths of quart of boiling meat stock (or water). Stir well until it comes to a boil, then add eighteen fresh tomatoes, cut in pieces; one bay leaf; season with salt and pepper, and add a little sugar. Cook on hot fire for one hour, constantly stirring, and when ready, strain; add two small pieces of butter, one-half pint of good rich cream, and serve.

Vermicelli or Chestnuts Chantilly

Take chestnuts, cut and peel. Put in oven so you can peel them easier. Cover them with water and put in two cupfuls of granulated sugar. Let boil for two hours, drain off liquid and strain chestnuts through a sieve, but have same very thick. Flavor with vanilla and rum and add a very heavy syrup of sugar and pass through a syllabub churn. Take meringue shell, make a circle and fill with the chestnuts preparation. Decorate with whipped cream, Maraschino cherries and macaroons. Flavor with kirsh and serve.

Potato Stuffing for Goose

Two cups hot mashed potatoes, one and one-fourth cups soft stale bread crumbs, one-fourth cup finely chopped fat salt pork, one finely chopped onion, one-third cup butter, one egg, one and one-half teaspoons salt, one teaspoon sage.

Add to potato, bread crumbs, butter, egg, salt, and sage; then add pork and onion.

Fresh Mushrooms, Duxelle

Take large, fresh mushrooms, cut off stems, put in cold water and wash thoroughly three or four times, then place the heads of mushrooms upside down in saucepan with butter. Add paprika, lemon juice, chopped parsley, put in oven and leave cook for ten minutes. Take one minced onion, brown in pan with little butter. Add the stems of mushrooms, chopped very fine. Take all kinds of mixed meats, hams, tongue, etc., chopped very fine. Cook fifteen minutes all together. Add few drops Worcestershire sauce, which will form a filling for the mushrooms. Take mushrooms and stuff with the above filling, put a little butter on top and bake in oven for five minutes. Take out of oven and serve on toast.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT

The Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and its Work

Edited by Thomson R. Bryant, Supt.

EDITOR'S NOTE—This is the fourth of a series of articles on The Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and its Work.

GREAT efforts are being made by the different states in the eradication of hog cholera. Kentucky's annual loss from this disease has been between one and two million dollars in recent years. Every state of any consequence in swine production now has a state laboratory for the production of anti-hog cholera serum. Just a few years ago the United States Bureau of Animal Industry invited the Experiment Station authorities of the various states to visit the government laboratory at Ames, Iowa; first, for the purpose of familiarizing the state authorities with this new discovery, and indirectly to have them go before the legislature of their respective states in behalf of the swine industry. Their policy was right. It was not long before the principal hog raising states were dispensing this protective serum. The evolution and growth of some of these laboratories have been remarkable.

Anti-hog cholera serum is the defibrinated blood or blood-serum obtained from immune hogs highly immunized against the disease by repeated injections of hog cholera virus. The blood is drawn from the tails of hyperimmune hogs under as nearly perfect aseptic conditions as possible, defibrinated and placed in sterile bottles. It is then immediately put in a large refrigerator where it is kept until tested, and expressed to parties desiring it. Drs. Dorset and Niles are responsible for the discovery of this serum. It is called the Dorset-Niles Anti-Hog Cholera Serum.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK IN KENTUCKY

In 1910 the Legislature of Kentucky appropriated $2,000 for the production of anti-hog cholera serum. This money was expended in erecting a small frame laboratory, and the work of producing serum to combat hog cholera in Kentucky was started in this building with five hyperimmune hogs. In a short time the demands for serum from farmers over the State increased beyond the capacity of this meagrely equipped building, and in 1912 an additional appropriation was made, which resulted in the erection of a new and modern laboratory at a cost of $11,000. This laboratory, which should meet the demands of Kentucky swine raisers, has a capacity of 300,000 cubic centimeters of anti-hog cholera serum per week, or a sufficient amount of serum to inoculate 15,000 forty pound pigs. We might say the insurance of $75,000 worth of healthy porkers at a nominal cost of $2,000 to the farmers. Farmers pay the cost of production for the serum, i. e., one cent per cubic centimeter.

The new laboratory proper is so arranged and equipped that all serum is handled in one room in separate containers from that of the virus, and every possible equipment has been installed to prepare a highly potent serum. With such a laboratory, and the cooperation of the veterinarians, Kentucky should make a good record in handling this problem. The administration of the serum is confined to graduate veterinarians and to those nongraduate men who prove efficient in this work. Only experts are allowed to handle the virus. The production of serum is governed by the rules and regulations of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

METHOD OF VACCINATING HOGS

There are three methods of vaccinating hogs, namely: (a) The Serum Alone Method, (b) The Serum Simultaneous Method, (c) The Combination Method.

SERUM ALONE METHOD

As the name suggests, this method consists in injecting serum alone into the animal at points previously indicated. Hog cholera can not possibly be introduced or transmitted by serum alone. This method immunizes hogs from a few weeks to two months.

SERUM SIMULTANEOUS METHOD

This method consists in injecting the same amount of serum as recommended in the serum-alone method, but in addition a small amount of hog cholera virus (blood of a hog suffering from cholera), is injected, before the hog is released, in the opposite thigh or opposite side of the neck from which the serum was injected. Severe transitory effects may follow the use of this method and occasionally a very susceptible pig develops the disease from the inoculation and dies. The average loss is about one or two percent. Hogs vaccinated by this method are immune to the disease of cholera from six months to life; usually for life.

THE COMBINATION METHOD

The Combination Method consists in first using the serum alone, followed by the injection of serum and virus in ten or twelve days. This method has the advantage of preparing the animal for the serum-simultaneous treatment, and practically removes all danger of loss following the serum simultaneous treatment. It should be used especially in valuable herds where the loss of one or two animals would more than pay the entire cost of the vaccination.

HOW TO DETERMINE THE METHOD TO USE IN VACCINATING A HERD

The method to be employed in vaccinating a herd is, at times, no easy matter to determine. The following mode of procedure will aid the veterinarian and farmer in reaching a decision. First, a complete history of the herd should be obtained. This history should consist in determining first of all if the herd is diseased or if any of the animals on the place have died and from what cause; the prevalence of hog cholera on adjoining farms or in the immediate vicinity, and the time which has elapsed since the last out-break of hog cholera on the premises. The history of all newly purchased hogs should also be obtained.

Before a method of vaccination is decided upon it should be ascertained beyond a doubt whether or not the sick animals in the herd are suffering from cholera. In order to do this, the temperature of a sick hog should be taken, after which he should be killed and a post-mortem examination made. If sufficient lesions are not found for diagnostic purposes in the first post-mortem, other sick animals should be killed and subjected to post-mortem examination so that the operator may determine whether the disease is or is not cholera. No one should attempt to vaccinate hogs until he is qualified to definitely diagnose hog cholera from the symptoms and the post-mortem lesions. Animals that have died are not good subjects for post-mortems as there is danger of the operator contracting blood poisoning through abrasions in the skin of the hands, and, moreover, the natural color of the organs is soon altered after death.

It may or may not be profitable to vaccinate hogs in a herd affected with cholera. The serum is a preventive and not a cure, and if all or the greater number of hogs in the herd show visible symptoms of the disease of cholera, it is useless to vaccinate. However, if the disease has just started, a goodly number of the hogs showing no visible symptoms of cholera may be saved. In such a herd the serum-alone method should be used and all the inoculated animals allowed to run on the infected ground. By this method, those hogs that have not already picked up some of the infection in the natural way, are liable to do so later. This will result in more or less permanent immunity. In other words, the result will practically be the same as if healthy hogs had received the serum-simultaneous inoculation. The temperature of each animal should be taken and recorded. Some animals may appear to be in a perfectly healthy condition, and yet may be incubating the disease. Such animals may show temperature far above normal, however, often as high as 108 degrees F. Animals showing a temperature of 105 degrees or lower, may be saved sometimes by the use of serum alone in infected herds. There may be even some chance of saving those showing higher temperatures provided there are no visible symptoms of the disease. It is best to double the dose of serum on pigs showing temperatures but exhibiting no visible symptoms of cholera. In young hogs a temperature of over 103.5 degrees F., or over 103 degrees F. in mature hogs, indicates fever, especially so, if the history of the herd indicates infection with cholera. If an apparently healthy herd is located near an infected herd of hogs, the simultaneous method may be used. No one but an expert, however, should attempt this method of vaccination. Great care must be exercised by the operator in determining that the disease is not already in the herd, in the incubation stage. If it is present, no virus should be used, for if employed, it would simply add to the infection already present and result in the loss of animals. The simultaneous treatment can be given to animals in such a herd showing no clinical symptoms of the disease and not registering a temperature over 103 degrees F. for mature animals and 103.5 degrees F. for pigs and shoats. Individuals having temperatures higher than this should be given serum alone. If the weather is warm, the work should be done early in the forenoon and late in the afternoon.

Showing Method of Inoculating a Pig in the Fore Flank.

The serum-alone method should be employed on all recently infected farms or on farms that have had more or less permanent infection for years. All young pigs should be given serum alone before they are ten days old, and a second injection of serum alone on or about weaning time.

Sows that are suckling pigs should never be given the serum simultaneous treatment, but both sow and pigs should be given serum alone. After the pigs are weaned, the sows and pigs may be given the simultaneous treatment provided they all look healthy and show normal temperatures.

The serum alone method should be employed on animals that are about to be shipped on a show circuit. If the circuit extends over a few weeks, it might be well to re-inoculate such a herd four or five weeks after the first inoculation.

Pigs from dams that have been immunized by the serum-simultaneous method before being bred, may be given serum and virus when they are from ten days to three weeks old. Such pigs derive considerable immunity from their dams until they are of this age, and hence stand the simultaneous treatment well. To secure permanent immunity, they should again be vaccinated by the serum-simultaneous method when they are weaned. It should be borne in mind, however, that pigs from immune dams and immune sires are not permanently immune. The method mentioned above is the one employed in immunizing the Experiment Station pigs and has been successful so far. The premises on which these pigs run must be considered permanently infected, inasmuch as the building for housing virus pigs for the production of the cholera blood, used in hyperimmunization, is located on the same grounds.

It is unwise in extremely warm weather to give a healthy herd of hogs the simultaneous treatment in a non-infected territory, simply for the reason that one or two of the pigs may come down with the disease and thus become a source of infection to neighboring farms.

NEED FOR ADOPTION OF A SANITARY CODE

Hog cholera has cost the American farmer millions of dollars, and everything indicates that it will continue to toll a heavy loss until every state in the Union passes rigid sanitary laws governing diseased herds and infected premises. Hogs should have clean quarters in which to sleep. The houses should be dry and well ventilated. The troughs and floors from which hogs are fed should be kept scrupulously clean and disinfected once a week. The lack of quarantine laws for cholera herds and premises in Kentucky allows this disease to spread rapidly. The negligence of owners in disposing of cholera carcasses and in properly cleaning and disinfecting cholera premises, has resulted in a wide spread of the disease on farms, stock cars and on public highways. Cholera carcasses should be burned or buried deeply and covered with quick lime. Burning is greatly to be preferred. Virulent outbreaks of hog cholera have developed from carcasses that have been buried for several years; therefore the man who buries cholera hogs on his farm is in constant danger of hog cholera.

Farmers needing serum should get in touch with the laboratories of their respective states and lend their efforts to ultimately eradicate this disease.

Pure Milk

By R. M. Allen

Head of Food and Drug Department, Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station

AN interesting, difficult, and most important pure food question is that of pure milk. From the standpoints of anatomy, chemistry, bacteriology, preventive medicine, the practical production of milk and the making of butter and cheese have claimed the attention of a large corps of workers and the general public. The first questions inquired into were as to the anatomy and physiological formation of milk in the udder of the animal, and its chemical composition. These were studied in connection with both man and many animals. The milk comes from the blood. A duct leads into a gland where it divides into smaller ducts, and these into still smaller, until the smallest duct is reached, around the end of which are clustered several pouches. Each of these pouches is lined with epithelium cells, and in the walls of these pouches are capillary blood vessels which bring the blood near the cells, and thus the milk is formed.

Smaller animals, such as the Jersey cow, produce milk having a larger percent of fat; larger animals, such as the Holstein cow, or the elephant, produce milk containing less fat and more casein and mineral salts. Fat is one of the foods which nature produces more abundantly against the rigors of cold weather. The elephant gives milk containing less fat than does the animal in the polar regions. It is climatic conditions and abundance or scarcity of food which influences large or small types, in the same classes of animals, and such influences determine the quality of the food which the animal supplies to its young. The study of such matters has been of great practical value in the selection and breeding of those dairy types which produce maximum quantities of milk of a maximum percent of butter fat.

The long search for the actual constituents of milk and the work to devise methods of analysis which can be used by dairymen themselves constitute one of the most interesting chapters in the science of chemistry. It was of much practical importance to know the amount of fat contained in milk, and to devise simple methods by which it could be determined. The chemists learned that a certain dilution with sulphuric acid would dissolve the casein and other solids, and liberate the fat. A simple process for collecting the fat was the problem. Finally Dr. Babcock, of Wisconsin, combined the well-known principle of the centrifuge on the one hand, and the knowledge as to the action of sulphuric acid on the other, with the well-known Babcock test as the result. With this test, and the weighing of the milk, the dairyman had an easy and practical farm method for determining the value of a cow for dairy purposes. This knowledge has revolutionized the dairy industry of the whole world.

Pure food workers first applied chemistry to the adulteration of milk. By determining the fat and the solids not fat in the milk, with respect to different breeds of cows, so as to establish a standard, they were able to know whether the milk in the market came up to the recognized standard. These standards, however, were necessarily made low so as to include all breeds of animals, and resulted in probably more watering and skimming of milk than existed before the laws were passed and the standards established. In other words, the milk trade started out to conform to the legal standards established which were necessarily lower than the actual standard of the dairy herds. It became evident, that the milk was modified by water, skimming, and skimmed milk to the "legal" standard, so the Food Department of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station changed methods and followed a suspicious sample through to the dairy, making a herd test, and gauging the milk sold in the market by the standard of milk from the dairyman's own herd. Comparing the conditions found in 1900 with the conditions found today, it will be seen that the pure food work has added more than twenty percent to the butter fat content of milk sold in the cities of Kentucky, and is keeping out, annually, thousands of gallons of water. In money values, the work is eliminating annually, on the most conservative estimates, more than $500,000 worth of fraud from the market milk supply. Preservatives are entirely a practice of the past.

The chemical examination of milk was followed by sanitary inspections and bacteriological examinations. The dairymen already knew from experience that clean conditions and icing would keep the milk from spoiling. Some of them knew from use that formaldehyde could accomplish the same results. The pure food laws took formaldehyde away from the careless and the unclean. The experts undertook to find the number and kinds of bacteria in milk and their sources. Milk from the teats and udders of cows was examined. There was some dispute as to whether the milk from the udder was or was not sterile. Finally it was agreed, barring germs from diseased udders, that the milk comes from the udder, for all practical purposes, in a sterile condition, and is contaminated in the barn, by the milker, by being placed in unclean utensils, and so on. Agricultural bacteriologists working in the interest of the dairy industry, made the majority of inquiries of this character. Prof. Russell, now director of the Wisconsin Experiment Station; Prof. H. W. Conn, bacteriologist of the Storrs, Conn., Station; Prof. Hunziker, of Cornell University, were among those who studied the bacteriological problems of milk from the cow's teat through into the market, helped to classify several hundred kinds of bacteria, to show that clean conditions and clean production of the milk insure a low count, and that reverse conditions always show a high count.

Accompanying bacteriological investigations, such men as Prof. Pearson, who started with the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture, was later professor dairying at Cornell University, and now president of Iowa State College, made a study of the equipment and method necessary in the dairy for the production of sanitary milk. Inquiries were made by the Federal Dairy Division into the market milk supplies of cities. Health officers, such as Dr. Woodward, of Washington, D. C., undertook systematic studies and finally, in 1906, all the experts of the Federal Government were brought together by the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service to collaborate the practical and scientific facts with relation to the milk supply and its proper control. Thus it was that a fund of accurate and important information was established which, while still leaving many important problems for investigation, was extensive, accurate, and practical enough to revolutionize the sanitary condition of the dairy business, when the educational effort and enforcement of the law should put the information into the hands of the health officer, the dairymen, and the milk trade, and require every-day compliance. The aim of the Kentucky pure food work is to obtain such results.

Up until 1904, effort under the pure food law of Kentucky was directed towards eliminating water, artificial coloring, skimming, and preservatives like formaldehyde and boracic acid in milk. There were several statutes against contaminated milk, the enforcement of which was not lodged in any particular officials. The evils of the slop dairy were extensive and dangerous, especially in and around Louisville. For several years the health officer had been fighting to have these closed. Farm dairymen made assessments to help, and employed counsel, cheap swill milk being a competition which they could not easily meet. The slop dairies were really for the purpose of fattening worn out and diseased cows, shipped from the farms into the stock yards, with milk as a by-product. Cows, chained like the goose, were fattened and milked in filth. Finally the health officer secured indictments. A case was taken to the Court of Appeals, and, on December 9, 1903, Chief Justice Burnam sustained the old statute of the State against the sale of milk from cows fed on slop or liquid distillery waste. With this backing, the health department renewed another year of attack. Attorneys for the dairymen, however, raised a new point. They contended that the swill statute had been repealed by the later pure food act, because the later act applied to all foods, and particularly to the sanitary conditions of foods. The lower court so held. The question was, had the legislature intended by the pure food statute to repeal the protection of the former law, or had it intended to supply a new remedy in the pure food law.

Physicians, consumers, and the health officer in Louisville appealed to the pure food workers at the Experiment Station, and we decided to meet the new point which the dairymen had raised with another point that if the legislature had repealed one statute, it had intended to cover the subject in the later act. It was necessary to reinvestigate unsanitary conditions because the new law would apply to the filthy conditions and not the feeding of the slop. The dairymen claimed that the slop could be fed without filth. Several dairies were designated for the experiment. The result continued to be unclean and unsatisfactory conditions, with which human labor could not successfully deal. The dairymen were notified in the spring of 1906, that after the cows were sold their business must not be started again in the fall. The majority of the distillers furnish slop only in the cooler seasons. Without exception, the dairymen again opened in the fall. Without exception they were again brought before the magistrate. Large fines and jail sentences were imposed. The jail sentences were held up for several months to allow the dairymen to dispose of their property. April 1, 1907, was set as the date to end slop feeding. As the date approached, pleas and pressure from almost every part of the State were brought to bear in behalf of the continuance of the practice. The county attorney, the health department, the magistrate, the committees from the consumers' clubs, the physicians, and the Louisville press stood firm behind one standard, and swill dairying, as an established industry, was forever abolished from the State of Kentucky.

We continued the sanitary inspection of dairies out into the farm districts. Milk depots, retailers' ice boxes, shipping cans were also looked into, and many cases prosecuted. The sanitary equipment and method in practically all the dairies of the State were several times surveyed. New barns, new milk houses, and awakened interest in sanitary milk production followed. Finally, the department secured funds to utilize the accurate methods of bacteriology. A traveling laboratory was put into the field for the purposes of showing local health departments, consumers, and dairymen themselves, just how the work was done. Once, twice, three times the milk supply of the whole State was gathered for bacteriological investigation, and the problem in each city studied. Some of the dairymen, with the conservative information just published by the bacteriologists, argued that the high counts did not mean bad bacteria. To all present-day workers high counts mean careless and unclean conditions. The task, therefore, is to convince the dairymen; and, so, during the past two years we have not only been making general counts of the number of bacteria in the milk, but have also been centering on one particular class of bacteria, namely, those of the B. coli group, bacteria which originally come from manure. A dairyman in Lexington, supplying one of the hospitals, had a general count of 3,000,000 and 50,000 bacteria of the B. coli group per teaspoonful of milk. We took the sample box out to his dairy, took samples of manure dust from the barn floor, washings from the cows' udders, a section of the strainer rag from the can, being filled in the barn, and a sample of the milk from the can. This showed him where the B. coli bacteria came from and how these and other bacteria came into his milk, from unclean conditions during milking and the filling of the can in the barn. He corrected conditions, put down a concrete floor, washed the cows' udders, installed a sterilizer for utensils and used covered pails; and his count dropped to within several thousand, and the B. coli disappeared. This is mentioned to illustrate the particular character of pure milk work now in progress in Kentucky. Results are necessarily slow because the force is limited. If the means were at hand to keep such demonstrations in progress in every dairy community throughout the State, pure and wholesome milk, throughout, would result in but a few years.

Along with such effort, the knowledge of physicians and bacteriologists that typhoid and diphtheria epidemics have been frequently due to contaminated milk, that the rate of infant mortality is raised or lowered in proportion as the milk supply of a city is contaminated or inspected, and the certified dairy, a method established by physicians in order to have pure milk as the best means for treatment in many cases of infant intestinal diseases, have been compelling forces for pure milk. In fact, it may be said that these certified dairies, under commissions composed of physicians of exceptional ability, and wide experience in practice, have been a tremendous influence both in educating consumers and as examples, here and there, of the equipment and dairy method necessary in the production of pure milk. An able committee from the medical association at Louisville helped us in the abolishment of the swill dairies and we, in turn, helped them in the establishment of certified dairies. Some six or seven dairies have been in constant operation there since 1906, and, during all that time, their average result has been within the standard of ten thousand bacteria per cubic centimeter; their herds have been constantly tested for tuberculosis; their water and feed supply examined; their dairies and the health of employees constantly inspected. It was these dairymen who finally taught us in Kentucky the practical technique of sanitary milk.

The proper methods for the production of pure milk, so thoroughly demonstrated in the certified dairies in and around Louisville have spread to other cities. In Lexington, two dairies, one with all the buildings, equipment and management which money could buy; the other with a buggy shed and a log cabin cleaned up and concreted, undertook to put their milk within the certified standard. The establishment of the larger dairy was interesting and important in that it brought to the practical production of pure milk the brains and backing of one of the nation's greatest capitalists of industry. If the production of pure milk can be a source of pride and pleasure to a man of such means and varied interests, it should be of similar interest and pleasure to the regular dairyman. The smaller dairyman demonstrated that milk of a low bacteriological count is easily within the reach of every dairy farm in Kentucky. To a cleaned-up shed and converted cabin he added a covered pail, a simple cooler, a steam boiler, and a sterilizing cabinet. In addition, the owner of the smaller dairy did a part of the milking and thus brought to the actual operations an interest and watchful care, difficult to employ. What this smaller dairyman did can be done by all.

At Cornell the dairy workers studied and undertook to establish a sanitary milk supply for Ithaca by applying the score card list of equipment and method for dairies. The experiment was allowed to lapse, and, after several years, the dairies lapsed to former unsanitary conditions. A recent Cornell report points out that pure milk will not be made practical until consumers pay the price. The other, and prior fundamental truth, however, is that consumers will not pay the price until the pure milk has been made practical and public confidence established. The trouble at Ithaca was that the work was allowed to lapse before fixed public appreciation had been established. Our Kentucky ex-

The Blessed Cherub

By Francis Goggin Maltby

Author of "The Pinhooker," "The Trial by Water," et cetera

BACK from the fields, where the old road ran, the berries hung in tempting blackness. A row of locusts hedged the trail, the low-hanging limbs shaded the ripening fruit. Down the path, the rustle of Polly Dean's skirts sent a covey of quail brushward.

"Don't let me disturb you," laughed the girl, as she dropped her bucket with a rattle. "I come in peace; all I ask is a square deal. These berries are mine by right of discovery and ancient ownership. Ned and I staked our claim years before you were born."

Sinking down on an uplifted root, she pushed the ruffled bonnet back from the face, a young face, not from years so much as from heart and experience—the youth that wholesome environment nourishes and purifies, just as the violet that blossoms in the shade retains its freshness, while those exposed to the sun wither and perish. Yonder, where a spring of vivid water burst from its limestone bed, a group of high bred colts lifted their heads and whinnied in recognition.

"Ned," she repeated reflectively, digging the toe of her boot into the soft earth, "Ned. No wonder he never took me seriously in pokeberry war-paint and chicken-feathered trousers." The girl's merry laugh rang out. "What a miserable little tag-cat I was in those days!" she declared, as she rubbed the nose of a friendly colt. "I wonder if he has ever discovered the sun does not rise because he crows? I used to believe it did truly—would have sworn it—I am not so sure I would not swear it now. Poor old Chanticleer! I wonder what life holds for him? It held everything then, everything that seemed worth while; but, now, I wonder?"

A stealthy crackling of vines made the girl spring to her feet. Looking through the low undergrowth, she saw two childish eyes, round and solemn, fixed on her. The owner wore a glorious Carib-suit with feathered-trousers.

"Is these yours?" demanded the boy, as he held two chubby fists streaming with overripe berries up for inspection. The crimson juice flowed freely; but the boy held firmly, as if he meant to keep his precious treasure at all hazards.

"Yours, you blessed cherub, just as many as you want."

"Does they 'long to you or God?" asked the boy, solemnly.

The girl caught the child in her arms and kissed the stained cheek.

"Everything belongs to God," she said, "everything, everything—the birds, the trees, the berries, the colts, the little boys, the little girls, the mama's—"

"O no," cried the boy, his eyes growing round and wise. "Papa said the devil owns most of the world. He said he was taking me away from the devil when he brought me down here. Papa said this was God's own country, and, if he owns the berries and the grass, I think it must be—in the city, where I come from, the policemen owns the grass and the market mans the berries. Papa said God owned the little boys and girls, but he didn't say nothin' 'tall 'bout my mama."

The girl looked at the child with puzzled eyes. "Where did you come from, and who brought you?" she asked in a breath.

"I come from the city in a bi-plane," he said coolly. "Papa dropped me here and flew away.

He showed me the house up yonder, and said one of God's good angels lived there, and for me to stay there under her wing, until he came for me. He said it might be a long, long time; but for me to stay with the angel. Does you know the angel, and does you think she would mind a little boy like me?"

Again, the girl caught the child in her arms, and held him close.

"No one would mind a little boy like you," she cried. "But—but—what does your father know of me?"

"You?" cried the boy in astonishment. "He don't know nothin' 'bout you! I wish't he did. Then, he might 'a' left me with you. If you don't mind, I'll stay with you, anyhow. I's kinder 'fraid uv the angel. One uv them come one dark night and tooken my little sister away, her did, and didn't bring her back; so I'll just stay with you." He tucked his head trustingly against the girl's shoulder.

Polly smothered the hair back from the temples, looking deep into the eyes. "If you want to stay with me," she said, "you will have to tell me your name, your father's name, and all about yourself."

"You don't know?" he cried in surprise. "It don't look like you know nothin'. His name is Papa and I know him just as easy!"

The girl laughed aloud in spite of complications.

"I like to see you laugh," said the child. "It makes such a funny round hole in your face. Show it again," he demanded, as he reached up and inserted a stained forefinger in the soft cheek.

"Listen, Cherub," said Polly, as she caught the little hands between her own; "what is his real name? What do others call him?"

A perplexed look came into the eyes; then, the brow cleared.

"O, I know what you mean! They call him 'Your Papa', everybody does except Mama. She generally says, 'Your Father there.'"

Again the dimple shone in the cheek! again, the boy cried out in delight; but the hands were held tightly by two stronger ones and could not free themselves.

"You can at least tell me your name?" persisted the girl, bent on solving the mystery.

"You are so funny," declared the child, openly amused. "You sure don't know nothin'. But pshaw! you's just playing like. You called my name as soon as you seen me. Most'n everybody calls me 'Cherub' sepin' Mama, and she calls me 'The Brat'. Papa says 'The Blessed Cherub', just like you did." He looked into her eyes solemnly for a moment; then, he asked in a tone of command that reminded her vaguely of some one that had passed out of her life: "What is your name?"

"My name?" she repeated. "My name? Just Polly."

"Polly," he cried, his face beaming with delight. "Polly? My sister's name was Polly. Papa called her Polly. My, but I missed her when she went away! She ain't been gone but a little bit, and I thought mebbly Papa wuz going after her when he started up in the air." A thoughtful look came into the child's face as he turned his eyes to the sky. "We went so fast at first," he continued, "that I thought it wouldn't take no time to catch up with her; but Papa said we just never, never could. . . .

Don't you guess Papa has gone on to hunt her by hisself, and just left me here because I got so cold and hungry?"

"You poor little lamb," cried the girl, catching the child up in her arms and holding him close, "here I have kept you hungry, while I asked questions."

She bore him lightly along, her strong, young arms hung about the baby form, her cheek pressed against his.

"Your mother," suggested the girl softly, "has she gone in search of Polly, too?"

"O, no!" declared the boy "she ain't got time, she's so busy with parties and things. She didn't see much of Polly and me. She were gone the night Polly died. Polly got to coughing and just choked to death. Wa'n't nobody with her sepin' me. Papa said she just flew up to God, 'cause there wan't no fit place for her to stay. When we started this mornin', I asked Papa if he were goin' to take me up to God, too; but he said: 'No, I'm just going to take you away from the devil!'"

The girl's heart was beating painfully, her pulses throbbed and the blood surged through her veins. Whose child could this be? Why was he thrust into her arms? What a picture he had drawn in his childish innocence! What a mother; or could she be given the sacred name? What a soft, cuddling armful he made! What a mere baby he was, and yet, how old! He had told her things, in his childish innocence of which she had heard, but never believed—things that to a warm, wholesome nature seemed impossible.

The figure relaxed and crumpled up softly on her shoulder; the berry-stained fingers loosened their hold about her neck; the blackened lips, breathing softly, spoke of slumber.

Through the door, swinging hospitably wide, she bore him above-stairs and laid him gently on her bed. She drew a chair close and held the little hand. What a soft, helpless, little hand it seemed! The fingers closed over hers firmly, and a faint smile curved the baby lips. With that smile, a fleeting memory swept the girl. Could it be? Impossible—it was simply the feathered trousers that were the same. There was no likeness, absolutely none. She bent forward and slipped the shoes and socks from the feet, the baby dimples were still above the toes. With impulsive maternity, she kissed the little foot. Again, the smile curved the baby lips. It was like the echo of a beloved voice.

In the days that followed, there were many battles fought in Polly's bosom. That the boy was Ned's child, she was convinced—Ned, who had dropped as completely out of her life, as if they lived and moved on different planets. He had gone his way when a mere boy, with his money, and the friends of his money; and she had remained here on the old farm her father had left her, with the pigs, the chickens and the cows—to her a sacred trust, and right loyally had she held it. Of the old playmate with his well filled pockets, she never heard, but often wondered, wondered with a tender feeling in her heart that would not die.

The first few days, she feared the father would not come; then, she began to fear he would. She read the papers assiduously, thinking she might see something about the child; but nothing appeared. As time passed, as night after night she held the child in her arms, the fear and dread of separation became almost acute. What a lonely life had she lived since her mother died, and how empty her arms had been! But now she knew the full sweetness of a dear little nestling form—how could she give him up?

Sometimes, in the stillness of the night, pity for the unknown mother would sweep over her. Then, the words of the boy would reassure her: "She's busy with parties and things." Polly would cry out in an agony of resentment: "She shall not have him. He's mine, mine." With wide eyes she would lie awake, the little warm body pressed close, her lips against the curly head. How was it possible for God to make such a mistake? He had given the mother the child. What was His plan? He surely had a plan. The child belonged to the mother, was given to her for some purpose. What purpose? Was she a party to a crime in withholding him from her? Then her mood would change. What an unnatural mother! She should not have him!

Days lengthened into weeks, weeks into months, but still no word, no message. Finally, one blustering autumn night Polly was startled from her sleep by the persistent ringing of the telephone. She opened her eyes with a terrifying sense of impending crisis. The little warm figure nestled close; the chubby fingers were closed firmly on her sleeve. Lovingly, she unclasped the baby hand.

"Blessed Cherub," she whispered.

From the telephone another summons came quick and imperative. As she took down the receiver, her hand shook like a palsied member. The howling of the wind, the stillness of the house, the darkness of the room, the lateness of the hour and the sudden insistent call from the outer world made every nerve tingle.

"Hello! Yes. . . . This is the Dean residence," she faltered. "Yes, I am Polly Dean. . . . What did you say? . . . Mother coming for child. . . . Not fit? . . . I don't understand. Not let her have him, did you say? Who's talking? Who? Hello! Hello! Central, give me the connection again. . . . Must have the connection. Long Distance, put them on the line again. Why, why did you cut me off?"

The girl walked the length of the room wringing her hands. What was she to do? If the mother came, how could she keep the child? The message said she must not, should not, have him. She lighted a lamp and turned it high, so the light fell full on the child's face. Not fit, and the mother of that child? How could God have made such a mistake? But the voice? With a bound of the heart, Polly remembered the voice. It had come to her with a dear, familiar note. It was his child—his. All doubt was swept away. She dropped on her knees beside the bed and pressed the soft hands to her lips. She knew now why he had worn the little Carib-suit. Ned had remembered, as well as she.

"I'll lie, I'll steal! She shall not have my Cherub," she sobbed. "Save me, O God," she whispered, "for the waters come into my soul. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing; I am come in deep waters where the floods overcome me."

Strengthened by the brief prayer, Polly arose with calm determination. Quietly, she lifted the child and carried him up the narrow steps that lead to the little garret room, where the dolls that she had loved in her childhood still slept in their cradles. When she came down, her arms were empty, and there were traces of tears on her white cheeks.

"Until I know His plan," she said. "God never gave a mother a child without a purpose."

Quickly, she made a toilet and prepared to meet whoever might come. The old servant, she would not disturb; she had better face this problem alone. If sin there was, she only would share it with Ned.

Polly turned the light low, and sat in semi-darkness, listening, listening. For a long time, there was no sound except the mourning of the wind, as if sobbing for some lost soul. Suddenly, the telephone began to ring as if it meant to wake the dead. With a nervousness that was almost unendurable, Polly crossed the room and took down the receiver.

"Oh, it is you, Doctor Burton!" There was intense relief in the tone. "Of course. Bring her right here. How dreadful! I'll have everything ready."

The message was from the crossroads, a quarter of a mile away. There had been a fearful accident—some automobile, "joy-riders," the Doctor said, a woman badly, perhaps fatally hurt.

Although Polly realized keenly the horror of the message, she felt personally as though she had been granted a reprieve from a sentence of death. She hurried away to make ready for the injured woman, and the physical activity gave her nerves relief.

Very soon, she heard voices coming up the walk. As she opened the door, the cold night wind rushed past her into the house. The figure they bore silently up the steps seemed limp and lifeless. In a fresh, sweet room, they laid her down. Polly took the cold hand and chafed it gently. The ministering angel in her had awakened. The Doctor looked at Polly.

"Am afraid this is an imposition," he said in a short, dry tone that made Polly look at him in surprise. "I should not have brought this woman here. It is not fit."

"Oh!" cried Polly, with indrawn breath, holding the long, slim hand firmly in her own. "Not fit? What do you mean? She is a woman, perhaps a mother, who knows?"

"Who knows?" repeated the doctor, as he took the woman's wrist between his fingers. "Who knows?"

The eyes of the woman opened wide and looked about. From the doctor's face, they turned to Polly, then wandered restlessly about the room, as if in search of something, until they rested on a Madonna and Child. A look of pain swept the face; but the eyes were riveted on the picture, which held them as by a spell. Her lips moved, but the words were unintelligible. The girl bent over her with quick sympathy.

"What is it?" she asked. "Is there something?"

"The picture, the child," the woman muttered, "take it away. I—I—can not stand it. Take it away." Closing her eyes firmly, she covered her face with her hands.

The doctor beckoned Polly from the room. "Call some one to take your place here," he said. "I will have to leave. There is nothing more to do; it is merely a question of time. 'One more unfortunate,' that is all."

At his words, Polly's pent-up feeling gave way in a burst of tears. The doctor patted her shoulder.

"Never mind, little girl," he said, "I should not have brought her here. The passing of such a woman is not to be regretted; you will learn this when you know more of the world."

"Learn to be hard, and cold, and unjust? God forbid!" cried Polly, as the tears streamed unrestrainedly down her cheeks. "If it were a man who had sinned, as she has sinned, would you speak of him as you do of her? There should be only one standard. Before God there is but one. How dare we set up a standard of our own."

The doctor turned impatiently and for a moment stood again beside the bed, then, with a few directions, left the house. Polly was glad when he had gone. She had never seen him like that before. With brimming eyes, she returned to the room, and looked at the figure on the bed. How graceful she was! What soft, well-formed hands!

Polly suddenly became conscious of eyes fixed on her face.

"It is good of you to cry," the woman said simply, "I scarcely deserve it."

Polly fell on her knees and buried her face against the bed. The woman put her hand tenderly on Polly's hair.

"What did you do with the picture?" she asked.

"The picture?" said Polly. "I put it away. Did you want it?"

"Yes," she whispered, "put it back; it kinder lights the room, and—and—I don't want to go home in the dark.' I will look at the picture and try to feel that I have my little one in my arms; my arms that never yearned before, how hungry they are now! I always hated children—Don't stare like that; it is the truth—but now, now it is too late, I feel their light breath on my cheek, and O, I love it so!"

"Children!" cried Polly, something clutching at her heart. "Have you children?"

"I had two blessed cherubs," she said; "but I was not fit, not worthy. God knew it and took the little girl away; she has gone, but the little boy—His father brought him down here and left him with a friend near the old home. Was in search of him when this happened. God knew I was not seeking him for love, but for revenge, and so He laid His hand on me; but, in this hour, the love has come, the love I had not known before. Now my arms are empty and there is no hope, I cry for mercy: 'O Lord hear; O Lord forgive.'"

The voice grew faint, the lips ceased to move, the eyes closed. Polly rose and went softly from the room. In a moment, she reappeared with the sleeping child pressed to her bosom. Into the arms of the sick woman, she placed the little form. With motherly instinct, they closed about him. The child nestled close with a sigh of contentment, and placed a chubby hand in the mother's hair. She opened her eyes and looked at the child. There was no surprise in the face, just the glory of fulfilment.

"My little boy," she whispered, the mother note in the voice. She pressed her dry lips to the unconscious head. "Cherub—The Blessed Cherub—his father was right."

"God's plan," breathed Polly, "God's plan."

The woman lifted her eyes and looked straight into Polly's face. There was peace in those eyes that was past understanding.

"You are Polly," she said, quietly, "the loyal little girl of whom I have always heard. Ask Ned to forgive me, and never let the little one know. . . . Take his arms and place them about my neck, won't you? Ah, that is good of you. 'The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light.' Tell his father when I walked through the 'valley and shadow.' I feared no evil; for I held in my arms the 'Blessed Cherub' to light the way; he was my 'armor of light.'"

"Dixie," the Song of the Southland

Its Author and Its History

By Rebecca R. Laughlin

FEW who listen to the inspiring notes of "Dixie" know its history. While it has become recognized as the song of the Southland, it is almost as well loved in the North, and has become recognized as one of our national anthems. Strange, indeed, that this song that sends the heart of the Southerner bounding and beating and inspires him with patriotism such as no other song does should have been written by a Northern man. Stranger, too, that this song that is so full of that kind of music that inspires and thrills was not written, as most other great national songs have been written, through inspiration.

Years before the war, when Negro minstrelsy was the most popular form of entertainment and when the bones and the tambo were instruments of delight and the end man was an important being, Old Dan Emmett, as he was lovingly called, the author of "Old Dan Tucker," ranked high in popular favor. He wrote "Dixie" as he had written "Old Dan Tucker," with a desire to give his audience something catchy and he certainly succeeded, for "Dixie" will remain as an everlasting monument to him. Its inspiring tone never failed to awaken enthusiasm.

In 1904, one of the great hotels in New York City included it in its nightly program of music, for the reason that many Southerners were constantly guests there. On June 28th of that year, as the orchestra struck up "Dixie," the crowded room expressed its intense pleasure. While this tribute was being paid to "Dixie," the old minstrel author, forgotten by the world at large, lay dying in his humble home at Mount Vernon, Ohio.

Daniel Decatur Emmett was born in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, October 29, 1815. His grandfather was a soldier in the Revolution, fighting under Morgan at the Cowpens. His father, who was a blacksmith, fought in the War of 1812, in the regiment commanded by Lewis Cass. Dan as a boy would "blow and strike" for his father in the latter's smithy. At intervals between his work he ran errands or played the fiddle for the villagers. He managed to pick up an elementary education, and when thirteen years of age entered a newspaper office as compositor. The result of his experience in printing offices is said to have been shown in the careful punctuation of his manuscripts. He still was working "at the case" when, at the age of fifteen or sixteen, he wrote "Old Dan Tucker." A year later he enlisted in the United States Army as a fifer, and during his service also learned to drum. More than sixty years later, after his death, there was found among his manuscripts one entitled "Emmett's Standard Drummer," which is a complete school for fife and drum "according to the 'Ashworth mode.'"

After serving a full enlistment he traveled with various circus bands. At that time negro minstrelsy was as yet unknown, although there were individual Ethiopian performers, like Dan Rice of "Jim Crow" fame. Emmett had traveled with Rice whose performances possibly suggested the negro minstrel idea to the young drummer. As in all such cases, various claims to priority are advanced, but it is certain that early in 1843, in New York, Emmett organized a string quartet, with violin, banjo, tambourine and bones and named it the Virginia Minstrels, first carefully looking up the word minstrels in the dictionary to assure himself that it could be applied appropriately to the new organization. The costume consisted of white trousers, striped calico and blue calico coat with exaggerated swallowtails. It was not until some years later that the regulation evening dress was adopted as a costume most suitable to the mock dignity of minstrelsy.

Emmett's troupe showed successfully in various American cities, but when it ventured a tour of England it promptly stranded. Its organizer returned to New York, found that his idea had been utilized by others, and eventually joined Bryant's Minstrels. From that time on and until he returned to Mt. Vernon, his occupation was Negro minstrelsy. His retirement was due to his age and to the fact that changes in the style of minstrel performance had made him a "back number." As composer of "Dixie" he had long since been forgotten. He actually had been overshadowed by its popularity.

Dixie's adoption as the war song of the South originated in the excitement it caused when sung on the stage of New Orleans Varieties Theatre, in the spring of 1861, when Mrs. John Wood was appearing there in "Pocahontas." A feature of the performance was a Zouave march which was introduced into the last scene. A catchy tune was wanted for this, and Carlo Patti, the leader of the orchestra, after trying over several pieces, decided on "Dixie." He little knew what that decision would mean for the song. When the Zouaves marched on the first night, led by Miss Susan Denin, singing "Dixie," the audience went wild and demanded seven encores. From New Orleans it seemed to flash over the entire South; the Washington Artillery had the tune arranged for a quickstep and the whole section of the country rang with it. Pickett ordered it played before his famous charge at Gettysburg. Thus the anomaly was presented of a song written and composed by a man who was born in the North, and who as a matter of fact sympathized with the North, becoming the war song of the South. General Albert Pike and others wrote additional verses, and these form the only foundation for the claim sometimes advanced that Emmett was not the author and composer of "Dixie," whereas his name has appeared on the copyrighted title page of the song even since its earliest publication.

General Pike's words to "Dixie" first appeared in the "Natchez Courier," April 30, 1861. Here are some of the characteristic stanzas:

Southrons, hear your country call you!
Up, lest worse than death befall you!
To arms! To arms! To arms, in Dixie!
Lo! all the beacon fires are lighted.
Let all hearts be now united!
To arms! To arms! To arms, in Dixie!

Chorus.

Advance the flag of Dixie! Hurrah! Hurrah!
For Dixie's Land we take our stand, and live and die for Dixie!
To arms! To arms! And conquer peace for Dixie!
To arms! To arms! And conquer peace for Dixie!

Hear the Northern thunders mutter!
Northern flags in South winds flutter!
To arms, etc.
Send them back your fierce defiance!
Stamp upon the accursed alliance!
To arms, etc.

Fear no danger! Shun no labor!
Lift up rifle, pike and sabre!
To arms, etc.
Shoulder pressing close to shoulder,
Let the odds make each heart bolder!
To arms, etc.

How the South's great heart rejoices,
At your cannon's ringing voices!
To arms, etc.
For faith betrayed and pledges broken,
Wrongs inflicted, insults spoken,
To arms, etc.

Another version that was very popular with Southern soldiers began:

Away down South in de fields of cotton,
Cinnamon seed, and sandy bottom!
Look away! look away! look away! look
away!
Den 'way down South in de fields of cotton,
Vinegar shoes and paper stockings!
away!

Emmett wrote "Dixie" while he was a member of the famous Bryant's Minstrels which he had joined in 1857. He was known already as the composer of "Old Dan Tucker," and he was engaged by Bryant not only in the capacity of a stage performer, but also to compose Negro songs and walk-arounds. The performance always wound up with an ensemble called the "walk-around," which was (or was supposed to be) a genuine bit of plantation life. The composition of fetching walk-arounds was a knack with Emmett that made him a valuable acquisition for a minstrel troupe. Moreover, he had a good voice and played many instruments, but especially violin and flute.

On Saturday night, September 17, 1859, after the performance, one of the Bryants told Emmett that a new walk-around was wanted in time for rehearsal on Monday. The minstrel replied that while the time was very short he would do his best. That night after he reached home he tried to hit upon some tune, but the music wouldn't come. His wife cheerily told him to wait until morning; he should have the room to himself so that he could work undisturbed, and when he had finished the walk-around he could play it for her as sole audience. If she liked it, the Bryants would, and so would the average listener.

Next day was rainy and dismal. Some years before, Emmett had traveled with a circus as a drummer. In winter the warm Southern circuit was a popular route with circus people, and those who were obliged to show North would say when the cold weather would make them shiver, "I wish I was in Dixie." The phrase was in fact a current circus expression. On that dismal September day, probably the beginning of the equinox, when Emmett stepped to the window and looked out, the old longing for the pleasant South came over him, and involuntarily he thought to himself, "I wish I was in Dixie." Like a flash the thought suggested the first line for a walk-around, and a little later the minstrel, fiddle in hand, was working out the melody which, coupled with the words, made "Dixie" a genuine song of the people almost from the instant it began with a verse which was omitted at the performance. The minstrels were very careful not to with all Pleasant Valley present. Big George Wells, who as town marshal, had little to do but draw his salary, but whose importance as livery stable owner was excelled by his position as clerk of the "Commission" and ex officio member thereof, was the marshal for the events. Upon him was devolved the duty of supervising the big dinner, and to him were brought all the good things prepared for that occasion. The young men worked hard in these events. Their sweethearts and mothers and fathers were there, and the inspiration brought out the best that was in them. These events were concluded with a "tug of war" between the town boys and the farmers. The friendly rivalry between the factions was intense and everybody enjoyed the fun and sport. The victors accepted victory with modesty, the vanquished took their defeat in the same generous manner, and cheered their successful opponents. And then after each event there was the anticipation of the enjoyment in the event to come. At twelve o'clock there were sandwiches, cider and real milk for everybody, and at half past twelve the prizes were awarded. At half past one the doors of the big barn were thrown open and everybody was given a sight of the long dining tables and the big Christmas tree. As each name was called by Judge Johnson, he or she stepped forward and Santa Claus presented the gift marked and the recipient passed down to his seat proudly exhibiting his gift to all. When the gifts were all distributed and everyone had been shown to his place by Marshal Wells and his assistants selected for that duty, the fun and noise stopped for a moment while benediction was pronounced. Marshal Wells gave the signal and the waiters started in with the turkeys. There were twenty-five royal birds, roasted by their donors, and warmed in the big ranges in the barn kitchen. These were followed by the roast pigs. The tables were apportioned off in sections of twenty-five, with two carvers at each section. Only those of known skill were selected for this enviable position, and they all proudly rose and the music of twenty-five knives against as many steels filled the room, and the dinner began. At one side of the center of the big table was a smaller table where was seated the youth of Pleasant Valley. When the age of fifteen was reached the youths of the community were entitled to sit at that table and they all longingly looked forward to that age to entitle them that privilege. The first chapter of many a sweet little love story was written there and the life history of many a happy family seated at the big table, commenced at the smaller one. When the stages of the pumpkin and mince pies and plum pudding had been reached and passed and the dinner finished, Judge Johnson introduced the orator of state wide fame who was the guest of honor of Pleasant Valley and for half an hour he led them through pathos and humor, tingling their blood with thrills of patriotism to a climax of beautiful simile. He told them the story of the pioneer band, and its providential escape, of the trials of their forefathers in the early days, of their part in the early glory of the stars and stripes. The valor of an unconquered nation had unfurled that flag to the whole world as the emblem of "Liberty." "Let us march," he said, "forever onward with that glorious flag to the front, ready and willing for any sacrifice for the common good of the greatest nation on earth." It was a great speech, and Pleasant Valley applauded him until the barn rang with their appreciation. Then there was music from Pleasant Valley's prize quartette, and then came Farmer Johnson's turn. He took an American flag from his pocket and waved it in the air and everyone arose. Then as they took their seats again, he told them of the early days when the farmer was the soldier as well, and told them how much their country depended on such communities as theirs. Realizing this the Government at Washington had given unusual attention to the development of agriculture. Experts had been trained and taught to assist them. And then he told of the services rendered them by one of the best in that profession and how they had determined to show their appreciation. The Farmer was in his element and his eloquent words ended in a beautiful period. He turned towards the door of the barn as the bull was being led in. When he caught sight of the little yearling that was brought in he was dumb-founded. His bewilderment added only to the laughter that had arisen, for he had described in glowing terms the merits of the gift. "There is some mistake," he shouted. "No, my dear Farmer," said Judge Johnson, arising, "there is no mistake, that is the gift intended for our dear friend of expert agricultural knowledge. We decided that while the best is none too good for him, that there is another member of this community who has given his best services to us daily, weekly, and yearly, all during his life, who is deserving of our love and appreciation, and every good thing you have said of the other man applies to him." At this point, Marshal Wells entered the barn proudly leading a magnificent young Jersey bull. "Farmer Johnson," resumed the Judge, "in behalf of Pleasant Valley, who from the oldest to the youngest loves you dearly, I present you with this token of our regard, and may God bless you and keep you with us for many, many years." After the dinner came the children's hours, when everybody took a hand in their games and sports. And then as dusk drew on the second floor of the big barn was lit up and dancing began. That night Farmer Johnson's good wife said, "Did you have a good time, today, father?" "Bully," he answered.

put anything on t'ie stage that might give offense in any way, and Mrs. Bryant, who was at the rehearsal, was afraid that the first verse might offend people with pronounced religious scruples, though she told Emmett, diplomatically, that they were "very nice" in other respects. He included them in some of his manuscript copies of the song, but the version generally known begins with the familiar—

I wish I was in de land ob cotton,
Old times dar am not forgotten;
Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

In Dixie land whar I was born in,
Early on one frosty mornin',
Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

Chorus.

Den I wish I was in Dixie! Hooray!
Hooray!
In Dixie's Land we'll take our stand,
to lib an' die in Dixie.
Away! away! away down South in Dixie.
Away! away! away down South in Dixie.

The stanzas which followed underwent slight changes from time to time. In their final shape they are:

Ole missus marry "Will—de weaber;"
Willum was a gay deceaber;

Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

But when he put his arm around her,
He smiled as fierce as a forty-pounder;

Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

His face was sharp as a butcher's cleaber!

But dat did not seem to greab her;
Look away! look away! look away!

Dixie Land!

Ole missus acted the foolish part,
And died for a man dat broke her heart!

Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

Now here's health to de next ole missus,

An' all the gals dat want to kiss us;
Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

But if you want to drive 'way sorrow,
Come and hear dis song to-morrow;

Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

Dar's buckwheat cakes an Injin batter,
Makes you fat or a little fatter;

Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

Den hoe it down an' scratch your grabble,

To Dixie's Land I'm bound to trabble;
Look away! look away! look away!
Dixie Land!

Mrs. Emmet had suggested plain "Dixie" as a title for the song, and her husband had adopted it. But when the song was published in 1860, it was called, "I wish I was in Dixie Land,"—a line which does not occur in it. Afterwards it was published as "Dixie Land"—but to the public it simply is "Dixie," which shows that when Mrs. Emmet suggested that one word for a title, she knew what she was about. Emmett himself stated that he had received five hundred dollars for the copyright of "Dixie," and that what he had received for all his other songs put together (which, it should be remembered, included his popular "Dan Tucker") would be fairly represented by one hundred dollars; so that during a lifetime of eighty-nine years his receipts as a popular song composer amount to six hundred dollars—and obscurity in a little Western town!

When he was eighty years old he at last had a taste of what it is to be famous—and one season of it was enough for him. He went out with a minstrel troupe in the supposed role of venerable figurehead. But when at the first performance the orchestra struck up "Dixie," he rose and, with old-time gestures and in a voice tremulous with age, sang the song. Throughout the South he was the object of ovation after ovation. He was grateful, but he also was amused, for he could not help thinking of the humble origin of his song and how far it had gotten away from its original purpose and his own sentiments when it became a war song.

However, he enjoyed the tour, but was content to go back to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he remained until his death. There his little hut, a garden patch and some chickens afforded him a sparse livelihood. Shortly before his death The Actors' Fund of America, when informed of his whereabouts, granted him a small pitance. He sometimes received paltry sums with requests for his autograph or manuscript copies of "Dixie." One of the most touching examples of his obscurity is that not even his townspeople were aware that he was the composer of the much loved "Dixie" that has been and is destined to be enjoyed for generations to come from one end of the country to the other. That Emmett was deeply religious is evidenced by the fact that he could often be seen sitting outside his door reading the Bible. This assertion is strengthened by the further fact that he left among his many manuscripts a set of prayers, of which he is the apparent author. He was endowed with a rare spirit of resignation and indifference to all that is material in life. And now that he has left us, his fellow countrymen, who were content to have him live in poverty and obscurity in the little cottage at Mount Vernon, are desirous of paying his memory the debt of reverence and gratitude! The most consoling feature of this is that he little cared, but thanked God daily for "this frugal meal and all other meals Thou has permitted me to enjoy during my past existence."

perience is that the milk supply of practically all cities is constantly improving, and that systematic sanitary methods are also accompanied by business efficiency in breeding, feeding, and the selection or disposal of animals according to their capacity for profitable production.

The very extensive experiment in milk control which we are conducting in cooperation with the Lexington City Board of Health is showing better results than yet reported for a city's entire milk supply. A good milk ordinance is included in the Model Health Code passed by the Commissioners, and the Lexington plan is establishing some very satisfactory methods for constructive milk control.

The cities must supplement the work of the State. The city of Louisville, for example, needs several trained field men to travel constantly among the dairies and for the purpose of advising and finally weeding out the unclean. It needs a bacteriological force large enough to keep constant watch upon the milk coming into the city and to examine samples sent by the inspectors from the dairy field. The cities of Newport and Covington, Henderson, Owensboro, Bowling Green, Paris, and other cities and towns throughout the State need to either employ specially trained milk inspectors or to insist that the city health officer shall have the knowledge necessary for the work and be sufficiently paid to give all his time to such duties.

The examination of dairy herds for disease conducted by the State Board of Health is also meeting with substantial progress. The Board of Health will request that this line of work be turned over to the Live Stock Sanitary Board at the coming session of the legislature, and that the State provide better administrative methods for the work. In the chemical, bacteriological and sanitary inspection work the dairy department or the College of Agriculture is working with the pure food department of the Experiment Station. To this effort we are adding the cooperation of the State and local health departments and of the dairymen themselves.

To investigate, establish and teach the essential, important, and practical facts relating to the best and most wholesome methods for producing, preparing, and distributing foods, and to bring the consuming public with all lines of trade into cooperative demand and observance, is the greater purpose of intelligent pure food work. It is through such methods that the universal and every-day supply of sanitary milk must finally be established.

Menus and Hints for the Christmas Dinner

Chicken Croquettes

One and three-fourths cups chopped cold cooked fowl, one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon celery salt, few grains cayenne, one teaspoon lemon juice, one cup thick white sauce, few drops onion juice, one teaspoon finely chopped parsley. Mix ingredients in order given. Cool, shape, crumb and fry same as other croquettes.

White meat of fowl absorbs more than dark meat. This must be remembered if dark meat alone is used. Croquette mixtures should always be as soft as can be conveniently handled, when croquettes will be soft and creamy inside.

Roquefort Cheese Dressing

Make your French dressing of one-fourth of good vinegar and three-fourths of pure olive oil, season with salt and pepper and add one large spoonful of grated Roquefort cheese to every two large spoonfuls of dressing; use paprika for your own taste.

Hungarian Salad Dressing

Two hard-boiled eggs, chopped fine; salt, one teaspoon of Hungarian paprika, one-half teaspoon of Coleman's mustard; mix together, and add one-half pint vinegar and one pint olive oil. Shake well before serving.

Pumpkin Pie

This makes two pies—peel pumpkin and cut in pieces, place in pan with small quantity of water, cook slowly, well covered, until tender, then strain, press through colander and hang over night in cheese cloth bag to drain. To make the filling put three cups of the pumpkin in a bowl with three table-spoonfuls of melted butter, one and one-half cup of sugar, three eggs, one teaspoonful grated nutmeg, one table-spoonful of cinnamon, a little mace, ginger and salt to taste. Two table-spoonfuls of sherry wine or brandy may be added, if desired.

English Plum Pudding

One pint molasses, one pound chopped beef suet, one pound fresh bread crumbs, one-half pound rye flour, one-half pound peeled and chopped apples, one-half pound seeded raisins, one-half pound Sultana raisins, one-half pound currants, one candied orange, chopped; two ounces citronate, two ounces ginger, four ounces chopped almonds, eight ounces powdered sugar, rinds of one-half orange and one lemon, one-half ounce mixed spices, four eggs, one-half pint rum and brandy.

Mix the above well together, put in pudding form. Set form in water, and cover; let cook for three to four hours. (This plum pudding is always better when older.)

Brandy Sauce

One pint water, mixed with one ounce of corn starch, cold; five ounces butter, one-half pound sugar, one-half ounce cinnamon. Let come to a boil, and before serving add one-fourth pint rum and one-fourth pint brandy.

Make the Farm Home More Comfortable by Installing The Deming Hydro-Pneumatic Water Supply Systems

Considering the ease with which this system is installed, there is no reason why farms should not be as well equipped with a complete watering system as the cities. Every country estate owner as well as progressive farmers, florists and gardeners will appreciate the advantages of a satisfactory home waterworks system. The comfort of having hot and cold water in the bathroom, laundry, kitchen, dairy, etc., is in itself sufficient reason for careful consideration. The fire protection for isolated buildings which the Deming System assures, should convince even the most conservative of its desirability. It will materially decrease the insurance premium, and greatly increase the value of the property. There is no system that can compete with the Deming Hydro-Pneumatic Water Supply System in

Efficiency, Economy and Simplicity

The Old Way

By simply turning a faucet you can have all the hot and cold water you want whenever you need it and where it is wanted. The Deming System eliminates the annoyance of elevated tanks which freeze and are unsightly. It does away with upstairs tanks that leak; with frozen pipes that need repairing. It insures a plentiful water supply of uniform temperature and strong pressure the year around. Less plumbing and repairing are required for this system than for any other. It is easily and simply operated. The outfit consists of a cylindrical tank and a pump for forcing the water and air into the tank. No part need be visible as shown in illustration to the right. Only the best material is used in its construction, hence the system is of lasting value. If interested, write us for special 16-page booklet giving detailed information about the Deming Water System. It is sent free.
